Nowadays, the range of jobs available for young people is continuing to expand. However, there are lots of students struggling to choose the job they want. ~~My opinion~~ ^{To my mind} is that, students should base their opinion on the availability of jobs in their field of study and now I am going to prove my opinion.

Firstly, everybody wants to be successful and earn a lot of money. If so, getting a job that is in demand can be a perspective choice. The wider range of jobs your field of study has, the more chances you have to get a well-paid profession.

Secondly, getting an important and well-paid job means that you are able to build connections. If you want to get up on a career ladder and get a big salary, communicating with professionals will do you a lot of good.

On the other hand, some people may disagree with me. Getting a job that is profitable rather than can sometimes be for more less enjoyable than getting a job that you like like. Chasing a dream of becoming a dancer or an artist can be much funnier, but I still think that money is the most important aspect of the modern world.

All things considered, I think that preferring a wider range of proficient jobs to a job that you like is a better option. Choosing a job that is in demand will bring you more money and give the opportunity to build professional connections.

I completely agree with the claim that students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. It should be if not the main, ~~but~~ then one of the most important ~~reasons~~ reasons to pick one of the fields and I'd like to prove ~~the~~ ~~main~~ my statement.

Firstly, when we ~~finish~~ graduate from school and make a choice of what to study ~~later~~ later, we actually pick our future life's path. It usually takes four to five years to get the Bachelor's Degree and two more to get the Master's. But what is going to happen next? What was the point of all that studying if we can't find a job where we can use our knowledge? Students should really carefully choose the sphere of ^{further} education because their future really depends on it.

Second reason is tightly connected with the first one and ~~determines~~ ~~the~~ ~~amount~~ a really big amount of aspects ~~in~~ our lives. It is the ~~financial~~ financial reason. For ~~most~~ people Sadly, most people have the opportunity to get university education only once in their life. The older they get, the less they can depend on ~~parents~~ money of their parents, and, if after getting a Degree a person can't find a job to start making his own money ~~then~~ then what was the point of ~~getting~~ ~~the~~ ~~money~~ spending one's ~~parent~~ family resources?

There is no use in education if you can't find a job after graduation. Students should make their choice carefully ~~considering~~ ~~all the possible consequences~~, depending ~~on~~ on what they want their future life to look like.

Nowadays there are ~~many~~^{huge} number of possibilities to choose field of study that ~~you~~^{people} want the most, but sometimes in this field it may be bad availability of jobs, so let's have a talk on this subject.

Actually, in our world there are a lot of universities and other places where ~~the~~ people can get education with a lot of possible subjects to learn, so people can choose what they want, but it is essential to understand some risks. For example, some professions are slowly dying nowadays, so it is no need in studying for them, because ~~peap~~ people won't find a place to work with this education. To tell the truth, there are a lot of information in the Internet and ~~experiance~~^{experience} of parents as help for people in choosing right field of study, but not every human uses this help.

Moreover, some jobs in different spheres require huge experience, but, what is unfair, there aren't many possibilities to get it, which will cause problems in finding a job in these sphere. And, despite of the fact that there are government ~~programmes~~ programmes to help young people in getting experience and finding a job, this problem causes a lot of problem ~~now~~ these days.

In conclusion, in the world of quickly changing technologies ~~and~~ it is hard to choose right field of study to get right job without a lot of problems soon. So in this time university students should try to know as much information about availability of jobs in that field that they choose as ~~the~~ possible. It is very hard choice, ~~but~~ but there are things and people who can give some advices, and so people do ~~the~~^{the} right choice.

Some people believe that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. I should say that I disagree with this point of view.

First of all, according to this statement some harsh and violent methods can be used to achieve one's goal. I guess that people should not do harm to others. Before doing something people should think carefully. It is necessary to see the other side of ~~goal~~ but the things you do.

Then, I believe in a "life-boomerang". If you harm someone, someone will harm you. There are even many tales about achieving goals and doing it without any respect to others. People always know that they should respect each other, even when achieving goals.

In addition, I should say that while using violent methods to achieve one's goal people can lose all their friends. People don't make friends with those, who can be dishonest and unreliable. No one would like to have a friend ~~who~~ that can betray them.

By the way, some harmful methods can be illegal. I guess nobody wants to spend some years in prison just for achieving ~~their own goal~~ their goals.

All in all, I should say that all people should use ~~only~~ methods that are acceptable by the society and by the government.

In this case people will respect each other and do not do any evil and harmful things to others.

If a goal is worthy, then any means to attain it are justifiable? Every person thinks different. However, I think that not any means are good to attain goal. The main thing is that your means shouldn't have a bad effect on other people. As far as you start bothering someone or trying to use them as you need and as you want - it is not acceptable.

In my opinion, your goals are only your, which means that you shouldn't expect anyone to help you. Based on it, you can't just do whatever you want. You need to know and understand the limits. In the book "Crime and Punishment" the main character killed an old woman to achieve his goal. He did that, but problems in his life became only worse. This argument shows that in the process of attaining your goal it is essential to use only those means, that don't harm anyone.

Moreover, sometimes people can lose their control. In this race of chasing your dream and goal it is very hard to restrict yourself in a right moment. Once you did something that helps you in a case of achieving your ^{goal} ~~dream~~, no matter if it is good or not, you want to have and achieve more and more, and ~~the~~ means to this goal become worse and worse. That shows that it is crucial to realize what you are doing and where you need to stop.

In conclusion, it is significant to use different means to attain your goal, but not all of these means are justifiable.

It is important to understand where you should stop. ~~that~~ You need to remember, that while making a choice you took a responsability for your decisions.

There is no doubt that achieving goals requires some necessary sacrifices, however, some people are strongly convinced that any ways taken to reach it can be justified, while others would dispute this position.

In this essay, I will explore both positive and negative aspects of this question.

It goes without saying that any task can not be fulfilled without steps taken. For instance, scientists often test new drugs on animals in order to invent complete researches and start to produce them. Apart from this, a lot of people accuse scientists of being cruel but sacrifices are inevitable due to the lack of great substitution for these methods.

On the other hand, some people have no limit when they are talking about their dreams. Apparently, plenty of them would harm or even kill others to achieve their bizarre goals. Additionally, a great number of students would cheat on their exams with no hesitation, which is extremely unfair to others who prefer working hard, spending countless hours in order to succeed in ^{their} tests. All mentioned ways of reaching goals are considered to be unforgivable, even if aim is worthy.

Considering all these facts, there is no doubt in my mind that there are plenty of means, which can not be justified. Consequently, I do not agree with previously mentioned statement. Although, goals require sufficient sacrifices, they have to be appropriate. Apart from this, any aim must be properly considered, as it can break laws and might lead to negative consequences for a person.

Nowadays any person has a vast number of goals and neverending possibilities to achieve them, as human civilization develops and opens new horizons to itself. Nevertheless, some means to pursue our dreams should be filtered, as any person should act according to moral laws, otherwise one will cause harm to our society.

The famous claim "if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable" is rather complex to either agree or disagree with. From my perspective, there is no such goal which is enough to justify any actions, which were taken to achieve it. No matter how mighty the goal is, the means should not cause harm towards our society, either in future perspective or nowadays timeline.

If one is about to make a scientific breakthrough, the duality of it should be taken into account and technology should be terminated if it will cause more harm than use to human civilization.

For example, atomic breakthrough gave us a clean source of energy and allows us to make ~~our~~ Earth's ecological situation better, but on the other hand it allowed humans to create weapon of mass destruction, which doesn't only ~~can~~ might cause harm towards humans, but also to our ecology on Earth.

Concluding everything I mentioned above, no goal worth any means taken to achieve it. One should act according to moral laws and protect ~~on~~ the society in which we live in.

It is commonly known that each person tends to do everything in order to achieve goals. While some people think that it is acceptable, others are convinced that some measures are not appropriate. As for me, I have no doubt that if actions are vital, they must be taken.

To begin with, I would like to point out that every goal is a good incentive to work hard and make efforts. People who know what they truly want to achieve will never stop. It is believed that sometimes they can even forget about different problems and concentrate only on one aim. For example, when I desired to become a participant of the World Youth Festival, I was sleep deprived and loaded with my homework, but I knew that the most important thing for me was fulfilling dream. As a result, I succeeded in it and managed to show a high result at school as well. The festival brought me a lot of memorable moments

Furthermore, I assume that in some cases people need to choose their aims over families. For instance, when they are ~~are~~ eager to achieve goals, they realize that it requires a lot of work and time. However, this decision will be beneficial in the future, as after getting a perfect result everyone can share happy days with friends or relatives and go on a long vacation.

Lastly, the feeling of full satisfaction is worth taking all essential measures because despite all problems that can arise people get a great motivation to set new ~~goals~~ aims and never give up.

To sum up, I believe that every goal that is worth achieving deserves a lot of attention and even negative actions because it is a key thing to success.

This essay is devoted to the analysis of why university students should not base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. This topic is of extreme importance nowadays because more and more pupils have to choose a right way to their future career.

First of all, I believe that if student chooses an interesting field of study for him or her, he or she will definitely succeed in this sphere. This can be explained by the fact that a determined person can realise his or her ambitions in boring job. In this way, it does not matter if jobs in that field are available or not. I am sure that if a student ~~chooses~~ chooses the boring sphere for him or her where there are a lot of career opportunities, a person will not have an interest to develop skills and improve them in this field. Therefore, a student will not become happy with his or her job and life. For example, my best friend went to college which her mother advised her. She was studying automechanics. She hated it, she did not want to work in this sphere where there are a lot of jobs. Finally, my friend decided to change program, she went to a design college. There are not many working places in a design sphere but she succeeded in it. Now she works in a design company and has big salary.

Secondly, if students will choose only fields of study where there are a wide range of jobs, we will not have specialists in specific spheres. It can lead to the lack of some professionals. ~~Once~~ Once I and my family could not find a good family lawyer. This can be explained by the fact that it is said that there are a few job opportunities in a family law. Therefore, students are afraid of choosing this sphere.

In a nutshell, I would like to say that a lot of myths and stereotypes about some fields of study exist. It is essential to listen to your heart and not to lay on advices from society. University students should base their choice of a field of study on their interests.

It is thought by some people that a lot of significant creations were made by accident or while finding the solution to other problem. In my opinion, important inventions requires much time, many efforts a lot of time, efforts and knowledge and can't be made accidentally.

Firstly, many inventions require a lot of years to be created. That is to say, scientists may live in an era when the level of development of technologies is low and a certain period of time should be passed for achieving the higher one. Scientists make many efforts to create something new. They need to check all the variants and choose the best one. Such an activity takes much time before the great results will be achieved.*

Secondly, a scientist should be intelligent and get good education. In other words, education is a basic element of profound and deep knowledge that are necessary for great discoveries. Knowledge assist creators to reach their goals quickly and invent useful creations. Moreover, good education broadens horizons and develops the personality. It can help in ~~creating~~ making an invention ^{scientists} ~~new~~ and leading to demand of ~~the~~ invention among people.

To conclude, new discoveries and inventions are not made during one day or by accident. Creations are the results of a long and hard work of many inventors that face with ~~many~~ many problems. However, creator easily solve all the problems using their brightness and determination.

* In addition, creating is a long-term process. Scientist usually make little aims to invent something new. During achieving goals they solve many problems. Some of them may need new skills or knowledge. Thus, it increases the time spent on ~~the~~^{an} invention.

Nowadays many people argue whether a lot of essential discoveries are accidentally found or there is something else that stands behind all those creations. One people claim that it ~~is~~ ^{is} usual that creations be invented not intentionally, while others believe seeking the answer and then stumbling upon one accidentally, meanwhile others believe that it is hard work, diligence and intelligence that help a scientist find a desired answer.

To begin with, I strongly disagree with the statement, that considers discoveries and creations to be found not on purpose. Here are quite compelling reasons why: To my mind, actually viable inventions ~~stem~~ ^{stem} primarily from scientist's intelligence and meticulous studying. Were we to ~~run~~ ^{run} into answers one by one without carrying out ~~thorough~~ ^{thorough} research, we would have discovered way more useful things by now. ~~Here~~

Moreover, more inventions would be discovered were we to put more effort into studying process, because once you bury yourself in books, you will get an access to a tone of information that might bring you to answers that you were so willing to ~~find~~ ^{find}.

To sum up all things that I have mentioned above, I sincerely consider diligence and hard work to be a key to anything you are willing to find, ^{to} any ^{answer} creation you want to ^{find a solution to} discover, to any ^{invention} ~~discovery~~ that you

Nowadays more and more people are of the opinion that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. However, I do not share this point of view. ~~I believe that~~

I believe that availability of a job in the field is not the key ~~main~~ ^{main} factor ~~to~~ when making a decision in the university. In my opinion, a student should take into account his or her interests, hobbies and opportunities. Only when all these things ^{are} considered, a student can ponder the availability of ~~the~~ job. For example, a student ~~thought~~ ^{thought} that this job ~~seems~~ ^{seems} decided to be a policeman since he ~~thought~~ ^{thought} that this job ~~seems~~ ^{seems} more available and well-paid ~~nowadays~~ nowadays. However, ~~since he~~ ^{since he} ~~thought~~ ^{thought} a student had a strong desire to express himself and a passion to arts since childhood. So, now the student ~~feels~~ ^{feels} unsatisfied ^{with his daily basis} he is not happy with his life, and the ~~studies~~ ^{studies} ~~has~~ ^{has} ~~gone~~ ^{gone} ~~down~~ ^{down}. Therefore, I think that choosing a ~~career~~ ^{field of study} based only on the availability of your future job does not make any good. In ~~some~~ ^{some} cases, ~~such~~ ^{such} ~~decision~~ ^{decision} it can lead to the unstable mental health and even depression.

To sum up, the statement that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field is dubious. ~~Students should not base their choice on the availability of jobs in that field.~~ If a student wants to ~~enjoy a field of study~~ ^{enjoy a field of study}, he ~~should~~ ^{should} or she should ~~consider~~ ^{consider} take desires, interests and talents into account. ~~Availability of jobs in the field should not be the key figure in such choice.~~

It is not that rare to ~~hear~~^{see} someone saying that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. There is a popular belief that students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field, and I agree with it. To prove my point of view, I will give arguments in support of this allegation.¹²

First and foremost, it is important to be ensured that the prospects of your studies are big enough as the main and integral idea of universities is to provide their students with an excellent knowledge so that they can be specialists in their field. Therefore, it is essential to consider the availability of getting a job in the future, otherwise there is no point in getting an education. If it is not guaranteed that you can have a job after graduating.

Furthermore, if one studies a field that is not prevalent in society, there is a chance that one might have to get one more degree but studying another disciplines in order to get a job, whereas the person who opted for a field of study that has a lot of labour opportunities might get a work with a decent salary because the availability is wide.

To conclude, I believe that one should be considerate towards his choice of studies as it ~~is~~ undoubtedly affects^{his} future career. And I am sure that student that tends to choose wide field of study has more opportunities to develop his skills as he is promoted with different options than while the one who chose less available field do not have such chances.

Despite of the fact that there are a lot of students aiming for getting the same occupation.

DOES THE AVAILABILITY OF JOB MATTERS?

~~In our time~~ A lot of people argue whether students should base their choice of a future career depending on the demand in ~~these spheres~~ the society or follow their dreams and do what they wish, even if this is not profitable. My point of view is that a great professional will be invaluable everywhere, so students shall choose what they want to do, not considering the availability of jobs."

To begin with, due to the processes of ~~informatization~~ spread of technologies it ~~is~~ became much easier to find a workplace from any corner in the world, so students can ~~for~~ consider a lot of places for their careers, which helps to be flexible and not depend on the offered jobs in a concrete place. For example, some people in IT can be workless in their country, but in others they may be in need. This means that students should not pay a lot of attention to the situation of their place of living and can seek for ~~some~~ some great opportunities.³⁶

Not only the flexibility of students matters, but also one of the main notes plays their skills and social connections. People with a knowledge in their fields can start a career pretty successfully: begin a start-up, teach other people etc. Moreover, students attend ~~universities~~ universities, so they can make social boundaries which are essential ^{as} due to their usefulness ~~of~~ in career path. Also, students can add some new ideas to the ~~is~~ usual jobs — such creativity attracts a lot of attention and some firms can make extra workplace for such prominent workers.

Overall, the availability of jobs ~~can~~ matters, but every person ~~has~~ can choose the way how he will achieve his goals and get a workplace. ~~It is~~ In the modern world such possibilities are high, so students have chances to work in the place of a dream.

Many people agree with the saying, "If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable". Personally, I believe there is a bit of truth in it, but I do not agree with it as a whole.

First of all, the phrase is very radical. "Any means taken are justifiable" proposes an idea that if a goal is worthy, you can do basically anything to attain it: kill, ~~steal~~ steal, ruin other people's lives and whatever else. I do not agree with that. I understand that sometimes sacrifice is necessary, but not to this extent.

Second of all, who even decided if a goal is "worthy" or not? It's a matter of

To begin with, goals ~~are inevitable part~~ ^{play a pivotal} role in every individual's life. Not only do they make our lives more gripping and entertaining, but also do help to reveal one's hidden potential. Nevertheless, the burning question remains the same: are all means of attaining a goal ~~are~~ justifiable?

On the one hand, it is ~~goal~~ ^{of} aim that leads the foundation for one's striveness and endeavoring. By achieving goals, person can raise his salary, buy something new and, eventually, live with flying colours. For example, once I've set a comprehensive purpose to pass an exam successfully, I started to prepare for it and burn the midnight oil. At that time, I would not budge an inch and persuaded myself to work like a dog. ¹¹³

On the other hand, taken ~~only~~ ^{into} means in consideration, individual can cause harm to society. For example, the great emperor Napoleon had an urge want to rule all over the world. ~~and he did~~ ^{and he did} was not in the muddle about killing hundreds of people, because he considered himself the most important person ever ^{born} living on Earth and compared himself to God. This fixed idea, bothering him all day long, was a be-all-and-end-all for the ~~greatest~~ in France imperator, so he neglected all moral rules and did not care about ~~peoples' deaths~~ deaths of many people. Henceforth, I ~~so~~ utterly disagree with the ~~opini~~ statement ~~that~~ ^{assert} if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to ~~that~~ attain it are justifiable.

To crown it all, I ~~consider~~ the goal worthy only when I think I am inclined to think that before setting a clear goal, person should ~~must~~ ^{should} thoroughly ponder over the ~~effect~~ ^{effect} of his decision.
Under no circumstances may ^{an individual} a person ~~obey~~ bend a law or rule of thumb when it comes to interacting with society, otherwise ^{their actions} ~~it~~ might be damaging for other people. 275

It is almost impossible to argue that choosing the right university is a difficult task for a young person. You are still very inexperienced, but are already expected to make one of the most important decisions of your life. You are unsure what you are truly interested in, so choosing the university that you will graduate from and most likely be able to find a job afterwards is an understandable strategy.

They say it is crucial to follow your heart and choose a field of study you are genuinely passionate about. However, it would be an exaggeration to say that all jobs provide stable incomes. For example, a young woman dreams of becoming a philosopher. She applies to the university, but after her graduation she struggles to find a job.

You cannot deny the importance of the personal interests when it comes to choosing your university, but under no circumstances should you be in denial about the availability of jobs in the field of your study. It is necessary to consider whether you will be employed in a few years or not. One may argue that having an uninteresting job soon will lead you to a burnout. It is a valid argument, but being able to make the ends meet is undoubtedly more important than being bored at work. Overwhelming majority of people wish they had different jobs from their current ones, but who knows if they would have had the same comfortable lives if they had chosen other fields of studies. Securing your future and your bank account is a responsible thing to do and it should be a person's top priority.

~~There~~ There is a commonly held belief that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. Not only do I ~~find~~ ^{think that} this concept is very controversial, but I also can easily argue with those who support it. ~~World history has seen~~ That is due to the fact that World history has seen a whole plenty of various cases when actions of those who ~~find~~ find this statement reasonable have led to horrific consequences.

First of all, not setting any restrictions while attempting to achieve ^{the desired goal} results in the process of gaining success becoming ^{completely} ~~absolutely~~ terrifying. A prime example of such a situation is Great French ~~Rev~~ Revolution of 1789 ~~1799~~ ¹⁷⁹⁹. As we remember, the revolutionaries fought against an outdated monarchy which appears to be a noble aim. However, they didn't limit themselves ~~in~~ in the used methods which led to the Revolution becoming ~~an~~ ~~an~~ an absolute massacre. In years of Revolution ^{me} thousands of people were killed, ~~and~~ numerous ~~great~~ ~~for~~ gorgeous buildings were damaged and a ~~wide~~ wide array of various invaluable items were ~~stolen~~ ^{the} stolen from Royal palaces. As we can see, following the stated idea led to the most terrible ~~consequences~~ consequences one could imagine.

Secondly, a person who didn't follow any certain rules in ~~the~~ the past will not be able to limit himself in the future either. ~~That~~ That is due to the nature of any human being: ~~after~~ ^{once} ~~the~~ a habit is established, it is almost impossible to break it. In other words, this attitude leads to complete total disturbance and complete chaos even after ~~the masses~~ ~~a group of people~~ ^{the masses have} ~~the masses~~ ~~a group of people~~ ~~have~~ achieved their goals.

~~Therefore~~ In conclusion, the idea of ~~justifying~~ justifying your actions by the worthiness of ~~your~~ ^{the} goal seems totally wrong to me. It results in ~~complete~~ ~~chaos~~ ~~both~~ the worst possible outcomes both ~~the~~ ^{the} in process of achieving the aim and in the time period after ~~the~~ gaining the much-wanted ~~the~~ aftermath.

Without any doubts, schools nowadays are in need of helping hands. But is it the reason to require ~~parents~~ parents to be these hands for free?

In my opinion, no. Beign a parent is about spending the half of your ~~time~~ days at work to provide your kids with anything and the other half playing or arguing with them.

First and foremost, it will be just ~~unfair~~ unfair to require every parent to volunteer at schools. As a fact, some of them have more than one child. How are they supposed to ~~do~~ work at two or even more schools? Moreover, all jobs are different and some parents have to face some restrictions because of their jobs. Just imagine how hard it will be for an ~~astronaut~~ astronaut or firefighter to spend their valuable time volunteering. Actually, ~~it~~ it is worth mentioning that there are some families which consist only of a mother or a father. They simply can't leave their kids alone to volunteer at school.

In addition, it is obvious that some schools don't have so many parents to help. The amount of students they have is more than five or even ten hundreds. Consequently, when there ~~is~~ are about a couple ~~of~~ thousands parents you simply don't have enough tasks for them.

Also we can't left without attention that volunteering is for free. Parents have to buy their kids food, clothes and etc. for them spending time and don't raise any money ^{just} isn't right.

In conclusion, I believe that volunteering shouldn't be required. Those who truly want to help will do it anyway.

Nowadays, most people believe that any kinds of means can be used to achieve a worthy goal. Personally, I do not agree with this statement, because everything should be gained fairly otherwise there will be consequences.

Firstly, people do not usually mull over what they will do next if they reach their goals by cheating. For instance, a student has an aim to graduate from his medicine university, so during exams he always cheats and gets good grades without actually learning crucial material. After graduating, the student faces the reality. He cannot help people by examining them because he just doesn't know enough. As a result, he will be fired due to his incompetence. The student won't be accepted to work in hospitals, so his degree and the aim to graduate from the university were meaningless.

Secondly, the goal reached not fairly might cause problems in future. For example, my teacher told me about the girl who managed to cheat during her exams. Her aim was to enter one of the top universities. At first, everything was fine and mundane, but out of the blue her degree and exams documents were annulled. She had been studying for two years, when cameras were checked, and she was spotted to have cheated. As a result, she was excluded due to invalid documents about exams. That is how cheating ruined her life.

All in all, I believe that even if a goal is worthy, people should achieve it fairly. Judging by my experience, cheating is always exposed as if life punishes cheaters, and it turns out that the goal doesn't matter any more. If people truly want to achieve their aims, they should try their best and do it fairly.

Choosing ~~the~~ the field of study is a matter of a great importance nowadays. Many teenagers struggle to find an appropriate university and major. ~~People~~ People usually rely on the availability of jobs in the field while ~~to~~ trying to make up their minds. I do not agree that this factor is the most crucial one when choosing your future career.

First of all, the availability of jobs in the field may change enormously in a short period of time. A lack of specialists in the field now does not mean that the situation will not ~~change~~ alter in four or six years ~~of~~ person's university education while person is studying at university. Relying only on the availability of the job is not always sensible because the economic situation can change in a few years.

Secondly, if the person does not have any interest in the particular university and major he or she chose or lacks rudimentary knowledge, this person will not be able to become successful even if there are many jobs available. The most essential things in choosing future ~~a~~ career are interest, preferences and experience. If you are skilled and enjoy doing your job, there will always be a demand for you on the labour market.

In conclusion, finding the right field of study is very important. You may always be ~~unsatisfied~~ unsatisfied or spend many more years learning if you make the wrong decision. Basing your choice only on availability of jobs is irrational because the situation changes over time. I advise choosing the field of study according to your interests, preferences and knowledge and only ~~after~~ after that to its availability.

Nowadays, there are more and more debates about moral principles and when people should use them. One part of society thinks that those are the most significant "rules" when you do something. You need to care about others no matter what you personally need. However, another part of society says that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. I suppose that not every action is acceptable.

Firstly, when a person is passionate about something, ~~he doesn't pay attention to other people~~ he ~~doesn't pay attention to other people~~ does not pay attention to other people. It ruins society and causes harmful consequences. For instance, ~~my friend Max wanted to be on the top in one company. That's why he cheated on the interview and said awful things about another participants. He was so into his aim that he forgot about morality and damaged other people's reputation.~~ my friend Max wanted to be on the top in ~~one~~ company. That^{is} why he cheated on the interview and said ^{some} awful things about another participants. He was so into ~~his~~ his aim that he forgot about morality and damaged other people's reputation.

Secondly, it is not rare when ~~some people break laws to attain a goal~~ a person breaks ~~lots~~ a lot of laws to attain a goal. He destroys everything around him to do what he wants. No matter what rules are, he sees a goal and does everything ~~whatever~~ he needs. For example, my neighbour Edward always wanted to be rich. Unfortunately, he did not earn a lot of money as a doctor. When he retired, he decided to do some risky things and started robbing banks. The laws did not stop him.

To conclude, I am convinced that some people do not pay attention to laws and other people who surround them. That is a negative consequence of actions that people ~~do~~ take to achieve goals. There are right methods that are not harmful and they are justifiable.

Some people are convinced that all parents should spare some time to contribute to their children's schools.

Though, this idea is not ubiquitous and there are individuals who disagree with this claim, I support this opinion.

There are quite a lot of things one can adduce as reasons why the idea of getting help from parents is of utmost importance. Think about who can actually make the schools better or organise some inner events if not the parents. Of course, a lot of educational ~~centers~~ centres get money and support from the government. Nevertheless, this help is not always enough. Unfortunately, sometimes a sad picture of teachers refurbishing their classrooms and organising events for students can be seen. There are no benefactors they can lean on. And I believe, in such situations exactly the parents can help.

Moreover, for me it is axiomatic that every adult who has children has a willing to make them happier. In this case, an idea of volunteering time to the students' schools is salient. To my mind, it is quite easy for parents to find time and gather together to discuss the most important topics connected with the school life. It does not take so much time to organise some events for children either. In most cases the amount of money that should be collected is not huge. Meanwhile, think about how happy the children will be getting new experience and how grateful they will be to their parents.

On balance, I agree that all parents should be involved in the school life of their children. It is essential to participate in different inner events of the school or give financial support. By this small contributions people can make the process of studying more comfortable and interesting for their children and even^{for} themselves.

Many people say that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. But this phrase could be interpreted and understood differently. Personally, I agree with this statement, but only partly. I feel like this phrase speaks to people's moral values.

In most situations this saying is positive, but it is always about balance. For example, the phrase can be used to motivate people to work harder than they already are, but that can endanger their health and health of their social circle. Whenever we rely on this statement, we have to determine the importance of the goal we are striving to achieve in order not to harm ourselves and our environment.

However, even if the goal is the most important thing in our lives, we have to think of the effect that the means taken will have on the world. And we always have to set goals that aren't morally wrong. Because if we justify all of our actions by saying that our goal is more important, the situation may turn into big conflicts and even wars.

But even though this saying is difficult to rely on, the positive side is still there. For example, while doing a project at work or at school we may make an interesting discovery when trying to attain the goal. And in this case, the phrase becomes a guiding light to social and scientific development of the world.

To sum up, I only agree with this saying when it is about motivation and growth, not destruction.

For quite a long time already there have existed a prominent and influential thought in the philosophical and societal discourse, which is usually formulated as some variant of the statement "If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable". I wouldn't say that I agree with this opinion to any degree, and in this note, I'd like to explain and, if necessary, defend my position.

First of all, modern world is based on law and justice and not "the rule of strongest", and, in my opinion, it is essential for all the people in our society to follow these principles for the sake of justice and equality of everyone, sustainable and peaceful development. If we break these rules, the life will become harder for every member of society.

Second, judging from the point of political science, this statement is truly dangerous, as it can lead to the creation of totalitarian regimes, which view a human being as a mean to accomplish a goal. We've had multiple examples in ^{the} history that this way of government leads only to destruction, oppression, and mass deaths of faultless people.

One may say that not putting boundaries for yourself during a way to success is significantly advances your chances for "winning", but if ~~one~~ ^{you} does so, you become less ~~valued~~ trustworthy for other "participants". Only by collective work and compassion we can achieve what we desire as a society. Because in a team one's skills and merits multiply quite a lot and serve as...

If a goal is worthy, then any means to attain it are justifiable. This is a controversial statement that reflects on a difficulty to make the right choice when achieving the goal. I completely disagree with the claim. I do not think every possible mean can be justified when achieving the goal. Everyone should have a sense of sanity and responsibility.

For example, Raskolnikov in 'Crime and Punishment' thought that he was a superior over other people. He wanted to test his theory if he could become a master of his own life. But ~~the~~ means that he chose were horrible. He killed two women, and it only made him feel miserable. He was suffering from his own emotions and feelings. Those Undoubtedly, those means can not be justified or forgiven, even if his intention seemed to be nice in the ~~begin~~ beginning.

Another example is the greatest person in the history - Napoleon. He was an arrogant man with huge ambitions. His army was one of the best in the whole world. His men were brave and ruthless. Napoleon's goal was to capture the world by fighting and winning over other countries. Unfortunately, his army strength was used absent-mindedly. Many of his men were dying in the battlefields.

but he thought it could be justified with his noble goal. However, this mindless attitude towards people, cold and ruthless character led to the misery. Napoleon's means could not be justified even if he was one of the most powerful people in the remaining history.

All in all, it is crucial to carefully choose means to attain a goal. Every person should remember to stay sane. I hope that such a heartless claim will not affect people and their minds.

In nowadays, not all the parents tend to volunteer their time to their children's school which, to me, is upsetting. Honestly, I think that parent's contribution to child's school life is crucial, as school is a place where children spend most of their time. And, of course, parents can make this time better.

First of all, parents should attend to school events. Imagine this situation: a girl is trembling with fear before her performance. It would be so great if she had someone to cheer her up but here parents aren't there. The absence of family during nervous moments makes school event experience unpleasant for many students. That's why parents should dedicate their time to going to school performances to support their children, as it makes a big difference in a way how students perceive these events.

Second of all, parents ought to pay more attention to relationships between their children, classmates and teachers. They shouldn't skip class meetings because there they can learn more about environment where their children spend their time. It's essential to make sure that students don't have fights with their classmates and that they are more or less on the same wavelength with their teachers. That explains why parents should be attentive to social links in children's school and volunteer some time to dig into those relationships.

And last but not least, parents need to invest their time and money into schools' utilities. Studying with great facilities and modern technologies is making school experience better for children, that's why it's so important that parent take their time to make school more advanced.

In conclusion, all these factors prove that parents should volunteer their time to children's school in order to make their environment better and make school experience pleasing.

Nowadays the choice of a field of study is very essential for students. Usually it requires ~~to much~~ time and lots of ~~endeavors~~ to make the right choice. The situation couldn't have been different, because the field of study depends on the future job. That's why I agree with the statement that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field.

The modern society has its high standards. And one of these standards is your job. Unfortunately or not, the job shows your status and attracts or distracts ~~people~~ other people to you. That means that the choice of the job is important and should be made properly. But, of course, before getting ~~the~~ a job you ~~should~~ have to get a degree in university that will allow you to be hired to the company you've wanted. And here the situation is similar. The right choice of the field of study ~~at~~ influence on your future career. Applying for the ~~the~~ course in university you have to be ^{aware} of the job you're going to have in the future. Not every program will allow you to start working immediately after ~~doing~~ graduation. ~~Also~~ there is another huge problem. With ~~developing~~ of the world some jobs are ~~getting~~ vanished by ~~progress~~ technological progress. For ^{instance} example, some professions in the sphere of journalism and writing are ~~get~~ will probably get lost in 30-50 years, because new neuro engines can substitute such workers in many cases.

To sum up, the choice of a field of study should be definitely based on the availability of jobs in that field, because the progress doesn't stay on one place - it ~~develops~~ with each minute. ~~Thinking over~~ so some jobs are ~~disappearing~~ and some of them are ~~pop~~ being popularized. Thinking over your ~~Future~~ career it's so essential to take everything into account and make the right choice, that will lead you to the bright future.

Nowadays, many people tend to pursue their career goals. The majority believe that success can be reached only by honest means. For instance, by hard work and persistence. Others consider that unfair and even criminal actions can be justifiable in terms of achieving one's desires. Therefore, the topic has been hotly debated recently.

On the one hand, I think that people manage to succeed via fair methods and not ^{to} lose their face. Firstly, honest means help one to preserve crucial human's traits such as kindness and mercy. Secondly, these methods make an individual more independent which results in boosting his confidence and strengthening his will. The examples of people, who reached the success by fair means, can be found in literature. For instance, Joan Rowling. ~~She~~ She did not give up on her dream and published a series of her books despite multiple rejections.

On the other hand, unfair actions can lead to the success as well. People sometimes achieve their ambitions with the help of relatives and friends. Although I do not approve of nepotism, there are cases that inspire me. For example, Hailey Bieber. Coming from a rich family, she ^{has} set up a successful company, which is extremely popular all over the world, and doubled her income.

However, I oppose against criminal actions and terror in a view to achieve one's goals. The horrible examples of that take place in the history of the Soviet Union and Germany.

In conclusion, I would like to say that not all means taken to attain a goal are ~~just~~ justifiable. Only methods that do not harm others can be applied to achieve one's ambitions.

PARENTS' SECOND SCHOOLING

Nowadays a plethora of ~~schools gives parents a challenge~~ ^{parents are in charge of many things} and activities in their children's schooling, even though they are absolutely not obliged to do it: in modern conditions it may be quite hard ^{leisure} to spend time on ^{themselves} yourself, family and other essential things in terms of ^{for parents} giant amount of work. However, some school teachers make parents do even more work by making them

- It's not for your child

One of the most common reasons for making parents volunteer is that the things they ~~are~~ are obliged to do will make their kids' education easier and more beneficial for them, but it is not true at all — you can't be certain that the work you'll make will influence your kid's educational process in particular. The better alternative for making his or her future better is doing something for them personally: ~~buy~~ buy a new uniform, spend few hours with them learning languages or just pay more attention than you usually do and it will be enough.

- Your money may be spent uselessly or not on the announced purpose

Sometimes adults, especially wealthy, volunteer not only time but money to the needs of children's schools, and that ~~is not~~ ^{is} is not the better ~~decision~~ decision: ~~sometimes~~ sometimes the given amount may go somewhere else (or everywhere except for the needs of students) — it is quite unpleasant to find out few months after, isn't it?

- Spend your time in a mindful way

Being a parent is a hard work that require a lot of energy and effort, and frequently parents do something only to make their children satisfied while completely forgetting about themselves. The fear that you are not doing enough is irrational and exhausting, but not only for you but for your child, too. So it is better to spend time minding your own business to comfort yourself.

Newadays youngsters often agonise over their future, especially about their future job. In my opinion, university students should not base their choice of a field of study only on the availability of jobs as it is vital to be keen on what you do.

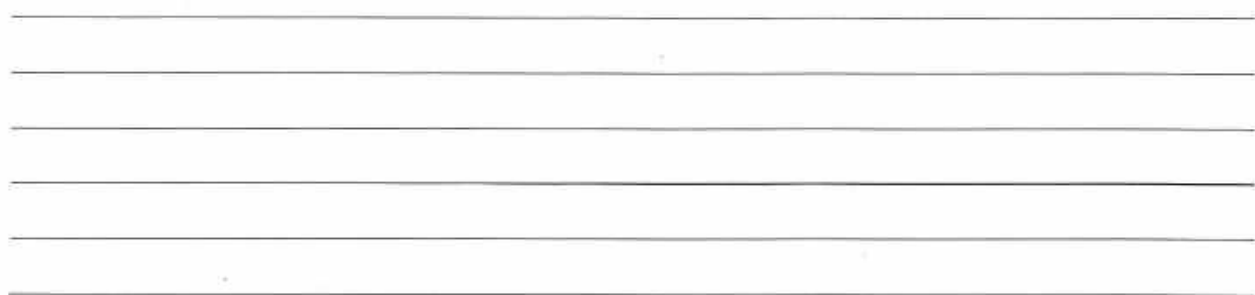

Firstly, today young people have a lot of opportunities to change their minds ~~at any moment~~. There are many various courses to receive education and change your realm. Moreover, they take less time and tend to be cheaper than some universities.

Secondly, I am convinced that ~~are~~ you are most likely to drop anything if you are not fond of it. Beloved activity or hobby bring much more pleasure and joy than the job that is in demand but dull.

Last but not least, modern and constantly changing world needs something that is authentic or original. People tend to sugarcoat the notion that the ~~the~~ more prestigious or available job, the ~~higher~~ higher salary, the more career opportunities and whatnot. But they forget about high competition on account of the fact that there are a lot of people who think the same way. That is the reason why you should think outside the box and create something new so that you will be more outstanding among others.

On balance, it is believed that one should choose their future job considering what is in demand. However, I suppose that one should find something they will be passionate about, regardless of low salary or availability.

Unfortunately, nowadays a lot of students graduated from university don't want to get a job connected with their specialization. It goes without saying that some of them are just fed up with their subject after their education. However, the majority of them can't find an available job. That's why, I think that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field.⁷⁰

Firstly, let's talk about the economical part of this question. If there is a small quantity of available jobs and a lot of applicants, then it is harder to find¹⁰⁰ a suitable work for you after university because you don't have merely any experience, which ~~is~~ plays a vital role ~~for~~ in getting a job. Moreover, if there is a lot of applications, you could easily get replaced with another person (get fired). Not talking about wage going down because of problems I mentioned earlier.

Secondly, because of a small number of companies, you are interested in, it can be nearly impossible to improve your positions and get promoted because you are going to have well-experienced and high-levelled colleagues and during first years you are going to get needed experience. Nevertheless, if you¹⁰⁰ are hard-working and talented, one day you will be able to make your dreams come true.

Thirdly, with AI improving it is important to understand if your job can be made by a robot in the future. For example, ~~IT~~ IT workers who are just able to programme, are going to be replaced soon. For instance, Chat GPT can write a code better than an intermediate programmer and it is being improved ~~in~~ nowadays in a very high temp.

That's why, I believe that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field.³⁰⁰

The question of whether any means can be taken to attain the goal ~~we~~ has been discussed since the dawn of humanity. It includes a lot of moral aspects that make people either take this phrase as motto of their lives or completely deny it. From my point of view, ~~an~~ every step in achieving goal must be taken with the serious moral analysis, so not every mean is needed.

First of all, egoistic approach can harm other people. For example, a person can cheat on exams or olympiads by using Internet or buying answers. Consequently, his or her results will be better than others'. After seeing their results, participants that were writing by themselves can lose their motivation or even ~~don't~~ ^{do not} pass exam or olympiad's stage. stage of olympiad.

Secondly, there is the other side — person harm herself or himself, by spending sleepless nights in preparing for the event that is crucial for them. Forgetting about own comfort, complete devotion for the goal can make life only worse. For example, majority of participants of intellectual olympiad study for 8-10 hours per day. ~~sacrificing~~ sacrificing their sleep hours. Needless to say, it harm not only their physical health, but psychological too. Consequently, they can show even lower results than people who studied less.

In general, any decision in pursue for dream must be justified from variety of aspects: moral, health, and so on. First of all Person should remember, that after achieving the end of the "race" he or she stays with feeling of guilt and in bad health condition or happy and completely healthy.

All parents should be required to volunteer time to their children's schools. I strongly agree with this claim let me prove my point.

First and foremost, parents should always help their kids in any way possible. Volunteering time for school is a sign that parents care where their children study. Helping school can be instrumental ~~in~~ improving its financial and educative conditions.

One can think that just donating money to school is enough to show your ^{care} for your kids. But by just spending finances your child won't be able to see any visual work that you've put in his school. If he sees how you labour to help his school with his own eyes he will respect and love you much more than by knowing that you spend money to buy some curtains for school.

For example, if a parent helps school to plant some trees around it his kids ~~will~~ will remember that these trees ~~will~~ were planted by his mother on a father. He will be proud of it and will be more emotionally connected to you.

Another argument in my favour is that manual labour done together helps people create strong emotional bonds. While cleaning the outside of the school or while painting school fences together with your kids parents ~~may~~ unintentionally ~~where~~ put themselves in a situation where whole family is doing one thing together. ~~that~~ These types of activity make parents and kids go through the same emotions and ~~that~~ with same feelings will help ~~to~~ parents understand their children more and improve relationships ~~between~~ between them.

In conclusion I would like to add that building a healthy relationships between parents and kids are essential to having a strong and happy family.

One cannot deny that all people have their own goals and targets. Obviously, everyone wants their dreams to ~~be~~ become true. But sometimes it is really hard to achieve them due to ~~different~~ various circumstances and situations. Therefore, a lot of ~~people~~ children, adolescents and adults believe that all ways are acceptable to achieve your aim. As far as I am concerned, not any means are justifiable, because some of them can hurt both people who are surrounding you and particularly yourself.

Firstly, while taking decisions ^{and then acting the same way} in order to achieve your target, you can harm your surrounding either accidentally or for purpose. If person is ready to do anything for their dreams, he is likely to forget about laws and morality. So, other people may come under the pressure of an adequate behaviour of a person. For example, the person can say a lot of wrong and ~~top~~ unpleasant words to his friends or relatives ^{while going to his dream}. In this case, it would be really hard to recover in their eyes.

Secondly, leading to your aim without careful and accurate mulling it over is dangerous for yourself as much. If you do not want to achieve your goals by honest and right ways, you will probably ~~a~~ kill your personality and your own moral qualities. For instance, if you use immoral and harmful means for your goal, you become another person. If you always cheat on your tests and exams without thinking it over and analyzing the information, you stop to study and learn; you become addicted to others knowledge not yours.

All things considered, I strongly believe that there are ^{no} not situations when all tools taken to attain are acceptable if an aim is worthy. It can be explained by the fact that not only ^{so} dishonest and immoral ways destroy your personality but also can be ~~be~~ harmful for others.

Creative writing - Topic № 2Great Discoveries: Accidental or Deliberate?

Every part of our lives had once been a striking discovery in the past. The simplest of things like clean water, centralised heating, air travel were ~~once~~ previously problems, challenging a whole host of great minds. No wonder people strive to learn the formula for the genius of discovery. Who does not want their own moment of "Eureka!"?

A heated debate emerged on the topic. Are great discoveries and creations always deliberate, or are they accidental? Personally, I incline to believe in the idea of sporadic nature of discoveries. History can provide instances to support my opinion. Let us turn to the scope of medicine first.

Alexander Flemming's greatest achievement was the discovery of penicillin. Everyone knows his name, and everyone knows that the mold, growing in the petri cups at his laboratory, was a mistake. The discovery of antibiotics has saved millions of lives, itself being accidental. Another example could be the good old story of Newton's gravity discovery. The tale of the apple hitting poor man's head probably stands somewhere in line with Mendeleev's dream in terms of popularity. The accident of the fall, catching Isaac off guard, was the main incentive behind the emergency of the physics' staple law.

One could argue that both of the aforementioned discoveries and creations happened thanks to the Flemming scientists' knowledge, experience, and practice.

Indeed, their expertise is hot up for a debate. However, it is worth pointing out that the factor which sprung their virtue into action was pure chance and accident.

In conclusion, it is safe to say that either way, accidental or deliberate, any great discovery requires a great mind. Instances of both ways can be found throughout history, but I believe that the surprise effect plays a major role in many of them.

What should university students bear in mind choosing a field of study? Should it be the availability of jobs in ~~that~~ that field? Now I'm writing this response to discuss the issue and express my own opinion.

I ~~st~~ firmly believe that students should base on their ambitions and preferences. In fact, it's possible to achieve a great success in everything. No matter how complicated and controversial the field of study you've chosen, it's all up to you. What is really important is how much efforts you make. One more essential fact is that you should really love ~~the~~ your field of study. Unpopular and strange though.

labour markets in that field may be, you always have a chance to succeed. Moreover, in this case you're able to reinforce your strength and become really popular in the field you've chosen.

However, in some cases it's not enough to just be ambitious and determined. Other factors also can influence your career. For instance, businessmen should be lucky and have some useful connections with people of various professions. Economists should be masters in their field as the labour market is ~~over~~ overpopulated there. Speaking about doctors, they should have relatives working in this area. Otherwise, it'll be extremely difficult to build a good career. Despite all this facts, students' precis tance and education remain in high priority. Advanced skills of person can make up for earlier factors mentioned earlier.

Conclusionally, I want to advise students to do what they want, ~~st~~ study the subjects they're interested in and never give up. Of course, you may face some obstacles but that's life! Sometimes it's just necessary to take a deep breath, calm down and continue working. I believe that people who try hard always achieve a success.

My father often says, "Follow your dream no matter what". This quote is similar to the quote, "If goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable". But it is truly so?

It is definitely important to follow your dream and to turn the goals into reality. ~~But~~ However, I think ~~that~~ that we also should always remain humans.

Harming other people should not be a part of a plan for reaching a goal. We live in ~~to~~ the society and we should stay a part of it. Terrible actions, even done for a great and important mission, ~~are~~ are still terrible actions.

I am thankful to my father for these wise words, but I have another opinion. It is more important for me to find other ways to achieve what I want that do not include harming others or ~~not~~ creating any problems for them.

~~I~~ I do agree, though, that having a dream or a goal is essential for every person. This helps us gain motivation to go further and get higher and higher results. If we see something that we ~~are~~ admire and want, we take actions to get it.

Sometimes, when I am about to give up, I remind myself that ~~if~~ if I stop, I ~~will~~ will not get what

I dream about, and continue taking steps towards making my goal ~~come~~ come true.

In conclusion, I would like to say that you should never stop in chasing the dreams. But if the plan of getting what you want includes troubles for others, you might simply slow down and find another safe solution. We always should think about both: our future and future of those who are close to us and help us in making our wishes come true.

The choice of a field of study is a difficult decision, that university students have to make before applying. However, with that arises the question, whether future career prospects should affect this decision? In my opinion, considering the amount of jobs in a sphere is crucial, and needs to be the prime factor in one's eventual choice.

Firstly, a lack of jobs in a certain sector usually means that an education in that sphere will not be demanded in the future, which therefore signifies that the student might be left with a practically useless degree, having little to no application in the job market. As an example, choosing philosophy or ancient history as a field of study might sound appealing to some, but finding a job with such a niche degree may be nearly impossible, leaving the student unemployed.

Secondly, a correctly made decision after a thorough analysis of the job market may almost guarantee a successful career path in the future. The availability of jobs in a sphere can make a student more confident in receiving a job offer after the completion of their degree. For instance, choosing a sphere with a high workforce demand, like IT or engineering raises the chances of finding a job, making it easier for the student to focus on their studies.

In conclusion, although different factors need to be considered when deciding on a field of study, the availability of jobs still plays the biggest role.

There are a lot of people with Bachelor's and Master's Degrees nowadays. So, some fields are full with experts and employers. Therefore, to find a job easily university students base their choice of a field of study not on their preferences but on the availability of jobs in that field. Is it right choice? In my view, students should choose the field that they are into, instead it can lead to terrible consequences.

Firstly, if a student choose his/her future profession that he/she does not like, he/she will not succeed in it. The study will become a night mare, prospective job will not bring enjoyment and happiness, life will be dark and unamused. That's why it is crucial to listen to your soul and interests.

Secondly, it may be more sophisticated to find a job than it seems at the beginning. For instance, a person choose his/her field of study based on the thought that his/her future will be cloudless, because of the availability of jobs in that area. However, it is not so easy to find a job if you are not a good specialist or if you do not have working previous experience.

To sum up, I believe that university students ought to choose their future profession based on their interests and preferences. Otherwise, something that seemed easy to achieve will become disappointing.

(Thirdly, students can understand that their choice was incorrect after several years of studying. So, they can loose their time in vain)

Nowadays, there are many debates whether people can use literally all methods to achieve their aims. Some people consider that humans should have some limits to attain their goals wisely not to do harm to anyone whereas others think that their goals are the most important and they are ready to use any ways to complete their actions without taking care of other individuals. As for me, I firmly believe that not all options for achieving goals are acceptable.

Firstly, if all ^{people} ~~person~~ do what they want to acquire something they are dreaming about, they will automatically break the law and other moral rules in the society. The resources on our planet are not endless. Thus, it goes without saying that people will compete with each other to have a better life, but this competition should have limits to be fair. Moreover, ^{not} all people live in the same conditions, they use different tools to ~~achieve~~ fulfill their dreams, and follow rules is vital for humans to have a balance in life.

Secondly, it is more interesting to live when a person can ~~do~~ to his best to fulfill his aim as it allows him to acquire many useful skills and knowledge. ~~The~~ People always ~~have~~ should have an ideal picture of their prime life in their minds to motivate themselves to perform any actions. If they achieve all their goals, they will just become lazy and lose a sense to exist in the future. It plays a really crucial role in ~~the~~ people's minds as they ~~intend~~ to compete naturally.

To conclude, I am convinced that not all means to attain aims are justifiable ~~and~~ because it is wrong naturally and has a lot of negative consequences, in the society.

In the modern world schools are compulsory to children. Undoubtedly, such a place requires support not only from the government, but also from students' parents. However, a question can be posed if all parents should volunteer time to their offsprings' schools. From my perspective, it is not obligatory since for some it is easier to help schools financially and some could have problems with health.

To begin with, children's parents are adults who probably have an occupation. The thing is that some workers could have no time because of bustling pace of occurring tasks on their job, or they could be busy climbing the career ladder. Consequently, ~~so~~ they have little or no time for their issues' schools. Saying this thing, some parents could support schools with ~~that~~ ^{classrooms} money so it would be possibly for schools to proliferate ~~classrooms~~ or boost a dormitory ~~if it was~~, for example.

In addition, not only parents could be overloaded with work, but also can be ill, so that it is hard ^{for them} even to ground. These people haven't got an opportunity to waste their time ~~while~~ helping schools so it would be pointless to make them to it. ~~Instead~~ For example, someone could break a leg or have a stroke so it is better to stay at home. Contemporary society should take into consideration such occasions and not to make these people volunteer ~~time~~ ^{time} to schools.

In conclusion, I am inclined to believe that not all parents should waste time to schools, as some could be busy with job and some could have various troubles with health. Instead of time such people can contribute money to their students' school, ~~what~~ ^{which} will be more beneficial, and bring more pleasure ~~than if that and if parents would~~

The recent article I have read suggests that students should opt for ~~the~~ their university major based on the career opportunities in that field. I am going to give my point of view to dispute this ridiculous claim.

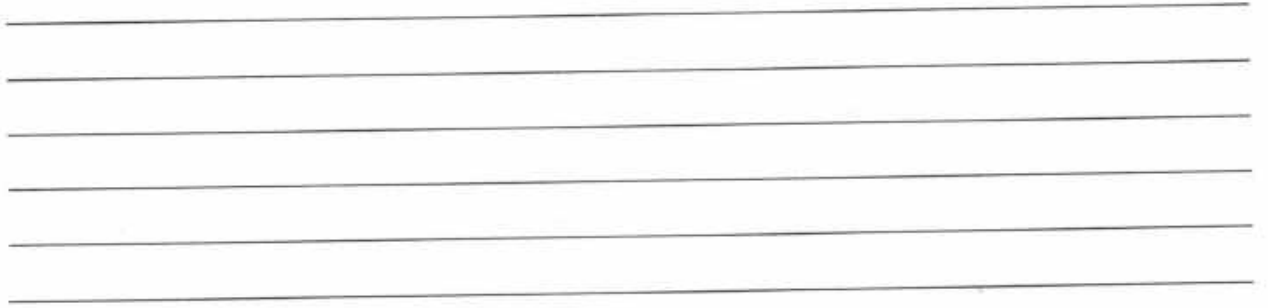

To begin with, it has been scientifically proven that the majority of students, who decide to connect their lives with a studying field they are not interested in, fail to find a well-paid and prestigious and well-paid job. Furthermore, it is vastly pivotal to like what you are doing to become successful in the future.

To prove my perception of this matter, I am going to give the following example: In his famous novel "Martin Eden" Jack London writes about ~~an illiterate~~ an uneducated sailor who aspires to become a well-known writer. Martin does his best and never gives up. He bravely copes with the challenges he has to face and is never afraid of miscellaneous adversities. His devotion, and resilience and perseverance ~~helps him~~ to allow him to become a famous writer. Even though writing was not regarded prestigious, and making a career in that field seemed unattainable and impossible, Martin managed to make his dream come true. Such demeanor shows the reader that it is extremely crucial to aspire to ~~fulfill~~ achieve your goals because it provides you with a sense of fulfillment.

In conclusion, I would like to state that the availability of jobs should not ~~affect~~ have an impact on your choice of the studying field. You should never give up and ~~aspire~~ always aspire to accomplish your goals, otherwise, you can end having a job you hate. ~~and it can bring you~~ So, again, never let any fears stop you.

In modern society, the question whether university students should or should not have their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field is discussed as much, as it has never been. The world is changing very fast, some professions gain popularity, while others ~~become~~ become extinct. The youth asks itself: „Should I pursue money or a dream?”

In my opinion, the answer is always the dream. Wealthy people are not always happy, some of them even say that they ^{had} felt better before they got all their money and status, because they at least had a goal. As I think, one can easily be happy without being a millionaire. What is happiness for me is painting a sunset or helping homeless animals? Some might argue, that „everyone can be an artist, unless they have nothing to eat”, but practically everything can be monetized - the very same paintings can be sold for some ~~very~~ good money and keep an artist out of poverty easily. One might say that there were examples of how people started enjoying the job after ~~the moment~~ they finished the university, and while that is true, the opposite ^{situation} is far more common.

I believe that the principle „~~with~~ money equals happiness” is wrong and has nothing ⁱⁿ common with ~~money~~ most people's lives. We have only one attempt to be happy, and if ~~you think you~~ ~~now~~ one thinks he will be happy as a painter, he should go after his dream in the university and even then.

Worthy Goals and Justifiable Means

Some say if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. Some people may agree, some may disagree, I personally don't agree as well.

When I think of the "means taken to attain" something I instantly think of many valuable things and/or resources that simply cannot be afforded to be spent on any causes, whether they are "worthy" or not. Doing anything you want also has some moral aspects to it, mainly sacrificing human lives to achieve a certain result, that's the thing I despise the most about this ~~claim~~^{claim}. Under no circumstances should the lives of other people ever be used to achieve anything at all, no matter how good the outcome of it may be.

The other argument I can bring into this is the use of different chemicals on animals like mice, rats ^{and} rabbits for pure testing purposes. To me that's just plain wrong and unacceptable, animals shouldn't act as test subjects in such experiments, use plants for that instead! You can use rocks if you wish to.

My position could be easily challenged though.

this claim isn't easy ~~to make~~ ~~to agree with~~ ~~to~~ agree upon. ~~However~~ ~~you~~ you could argue a couple ~~of~~ human lives could be used for, let's say, discovering a cure for cancer, doing it for the greater good, so to speak. You could also argue that mice and rats are useless vermin that we are actually making useful by testing different things on them before safely using ~~the~~ said things on ourselves. These reasons are pretty compelling, even I ~~was~~ am having a hard time denying them right now.

The claim is very bold and I don't agree with it whatsoever, but ultimately it's up to you what to think of it.

One will not deny the fact that every person in the world fancy achieving their goals and succeeding in their lives. However, there are some difficulties ~~from~~ that are sure to occur on your path ^{to} ~~of~~ success. Some people are convinced that if a goal is worthy, then any means ~~of~~ taken to attain it are justifiable. When it comes to me, I consider this statement to be true. To my mind, any effort is worth the result you obtain in the end.

Firstly, if ~~you~~ ^{one is} really eager to achieve something, ~~your~~ ^{their} goal is going to give ~~you~~ ^{them} an immense amount of motivation and will inspire them to ~~the~~ ~~the~~ work hard despite the harshness of the process. A person happens to do some unwanted job, knowing that it will somehow make them happier later.

Moreover, overcoming the problems that you face during the way to success will absolutely make you a Stronger, wiser, more experienced human being. ^{In addition,} This can help you alter your personality, work out some personal issues.

You should also keep in mind that only people who ^{are} ~~are or were~~ willing to encounter the inevitable difficulties of a successful life, ~~succeed~~ in their ~~business~~ and have a strong desire for their dream, are able to succeed in their business. For example,
J.K. Rowling, who appears to be the author of a best-selling series of books about Harry Potter, was at first turned down
~~by~~ ^{by} every publishing office with her "Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone".
But due to her strength and hard temper, she managed to get her book printed and published. Now she is the richest writer in the world.

To conclude, one should never fear the possible hardships along their path of making their dreams come true.

There is a famous saying: if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. I disagree with it for the most part. In my opinion, there is miniscule amount of cases in which this saying is justifiable. ~~Not~~ My opinion is based on few factors.

Firstly, such morality can lead to justifying poor morals. How do you distinguish between worthy goal and unworthy one? Who is to decide? No human can have the power to decide such matters. According to Kant's imperative, ~~means you take~~ actions you use to achieve a goal should be moral whichever goal you have. With that said, we understand, that such motivation is immoral according to one of the greatest philosophers. I believe, that if we asked ~~Secondly~~ Hitler about his motivation and goals, he would have said, that his goal ~~was~~ was worthy enough to justify his actions.

Secondly, there are some means we can not justify in any case. Prohibitions the law should be punished equally. It should matter whether someone believed they were ~~at~~ doing something for greater good or not. There are numerous cases in history, when someone was killed or war was started for "greater good" and because people thought that in their certain case unjustifiable actions are inevitable and essential. Even if they weren't.

In conclusion, I want to state, that I believe in freedom of thought. Someone can live by this claim as long as their "means" are legal. For me, such claim can't be ~~a~~ something I live by and believe to be true.

Throughout the history, a lot of brilliant discoveries and inventions were made. However, there is a statement that ensures that many of them are accidental. Personally, I agree with this statement, even though I really appreciate those who tried hard to achieve their goals. Now I am going to prove my point of view.

To begin with, I'd like to mention the story behind the discovery of penicillin, the first antibiotic. The scientist who found it had never tried to create this medicine exactly. He once forgot to clean his scientific equipment in the laboratory and left for a couple of days. Once he returned, he found out that one bacteria had eliminated other harmful ones that were there earlier. This discovery led to one of the most significant changes in the history of medicine, ~~as~~ it was made by accident, but it also saved millions of lives.

Another story worth mentioning is the discovery of America. While ~~the~~ travelling around the globe in order to find a shorter way to India Columbus had accidentally found a whole new continent about which Europeans had not know. Furthermore, he did not even realise it ~~at that time~~ and came back home being sure that he met Indian people there. This is another excellent example of a great discovery that was made by searching something completely different.

To sum up, I can declare that some of the most significant discoveries were made by accident. In this regard I believe that humanity should never stop searching answers for their questions. All in all, there is always a chance to find something ~~completely~~ new and changing the world.

Nowadays there are multiple goals in a life of ~~every~~ each person. People ~~to~~ strive to achieve their goals and use absolutely various means to do it. It is often argued that if a goal is worthy, then any methods to attain it are justifiable. I disagree with this point of view on ~~this~~^{the} issue. I ~~think~~ am sure that there are bounds of the behaviour normal in modern society. People can't do ~~whatever~~^{whatever} they want if it is dangerous or harmful for ^{other} people around them. To prove my opinion, I will consider a few arguments.

Firstly, whatever ~~your~~ the goal is, it is not worth ~~any~~^{doing} criminal activity. Violence is unacceptable in society so people shouldn't use this way to achieve their goals.

Secondly, there is a great phrase: "Your freedom ends where freedom of another person starts". It proves my point of view, because people should act and behave according to laws. ~~and not They shouldn't~~ They think not only of themselves, but also about people who are around. It is essential to respect other members of society and their rights, so each person should use only legal ways to attain his or her goal. ~~If~~ you don't want to be brought to account, think of what is permitted and what is ~~pro~~ prohibited.

Moreover, there are moral rules. I believe each man should act according to them. It is a very unpleasant feeling ~~is~~ when you understand you are guilty, so it is ~~is~~ crucial to take care of your mental health when you decide how to act to achieve your goal.

To conclude, I strongly believe that not all ~~the~~ ^{the} means taken to attain a goal are justifiable. In today's modern and fast developing world we shouldn't forget about politeness, moral ~~princip~~ basis and laws. I am sure it is significant to control yourself and be sure you ~~are~~ ~~get~~ don't get out of hand!

Ends justify the means. That is an old proverb, that has equivalents in most languages all over the world. Can violent ways be used to achieve an admirable goal? It is one of unsolving external philosophical questions. Personally, I believe, that nothing can justify violence, betrayal and murder, even the purest goal for everyone's happiness.

To begin with, it is usual for people to seek ~~some~~ ^{some} justice, happiness or high-levelled living. Everyone wants to live in peace and comfort. It is their basic needs and primal desires that become their ~~main~~ ^{main} life-long aim. However, ^{sometimes} people choose wrong ways to achieve their goals. It is normal, when ~~when~~ they passionately try to be ^{the} best in something, or the other thing they want, but when they chose a criminal or just immoral ways ^{only} ~~just~~ for sake of becoming rich, ~~and~~ famous and powerful, they are deadly wrong. History of the United Kingdom has known a lot of example of that, like Richard III, who can be ~~considered~~ ^{considered} accused of killing his nephews, Richard and

To continue with, one of the most popular goals ~~in pop-culture~~ nowadays this theme has important place in pop-culture, especially idea of absolute justice in a new world with crimes, criminals and fears.

This theme was arised in Japanese animation "Death Note", that became really popular between the teenagers. In Russia we have a film "Major Grom: Plague Doctor" by Oleg Trofim and Bubble Studios, and a new serial "Crime and Punishment", that was based on the same named novel of Fyodor Dostoevsky. In all of that film or serial we understand, that justice can't be achieved by playing a warrior from ~~people~~ ^{and killing criminals} humanity. It is like in Russian saying: "An eye for eye and the whole world became blind."

To conclude, I want to say, that I strongly believe ~~that~~ there is no way to justify violent and mean ways to achieve even an admirable goal, because there always are different ways, that are more honorable and rightful due to ~~human~~ human morality.

If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable.

Personally, I completely agree with this topic. I think that rationalism is the reason we don't live in caves anymore and that there are many historical events that may serve as a good and suiting examples ~~to~~ supporting my position.

Why do wars exist? Why do ~~some~~ men who never met each other have to kill themselves? Because, more times than not, they have to do it to save their country, their family or some other justifiable cause. That is one reason why the goal outweighs the means to attain it. If it didn't, humanity would never go to war, and yet, wars are very closely tied with the history of man.

For the second example I invite you to a thought experiment. Imagine you have one hundred people in a room with you. You also have a button in front of you. If you press all of these people vanish as if they never existed. If you don't press it though, the entire human race vanishes the same way. Would you press the button? Any logical being would. Basically it comes down to either take the blame, feel guilty and yet save the human race or take no responsibility, and with that end humanity. Of course it's horrible that one hundred hypothetical ~~men would die~~ people would die. And yet their sacrifice is necessary and somehow the easy choice.

That is why I think the ~~cause~~ goal outweighs the methods of achieving it. Sure, the means should be the most humane, but there are situations where there is no choice and you must stay rational.

Accidental discoveries and creations have shaped the course of human history, often redefining our understanding of the world. From the discovery of penicillin to the invention of the microwave, history is replete with examples of serendipity playing a pivotal role in groundbreaking achievements. However, while accidents may have sparked some of these discoveries, deliberate inquiry and scientific rigor are often essential to their development and application. I agree with the claim that many important discoveries are accidental, but I believe that these accidents occur within a framework of curiosity, experimentation and persistence. One of the most famous examples of an accidental discovery is Alexander Fleming's penicillin. In 1928, Fleming noticed that a mold in his laboratory had killed bacteria in a petri dish, leading to the development of the world's first antibiotic. While the discovery was unintentional, it was Fleming's scientific expertise and his ability to recognize the significance of the phenomenon that led to its revolutionary impact. Similarly, the microwave oven was invented when another man noticed that a chocolate bar in his pocket melted as he worked with radar equipment. While the occurrence itself was accidental, it led to the invention of a useful machine that everybody uses. A curious and analytical mindset is required to identify the potential in such occurrences.

Many accidental discoveries take place in environments where systematic exploration is already underway. The scientific method - hypothesis, experimentation and analysis - remains essential.

Without these tools an accidental observation might go unnoticed or remain undeveloped. ~~For~~ Accidents may ignite the spark of discovery, but it is human ingenuity that fans the flame into transformative innovations.

In this essay ^{I am} ~~am~~ going to ~~reply~~ give my reply to the statement, University students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in this field. To achieve this goal, ~~am~~ I am going to express my opinion on the subject of my essay.

~~According to the recent I believe that the claim is~~ I agree with the claim. When adolescents ~~to~~ get into a university, they make a choice that determines their whole life: which field of study to choose. Wrong choice may result in long-term negative consequences, so it is of greatest importance for young students to make a sensible choice.

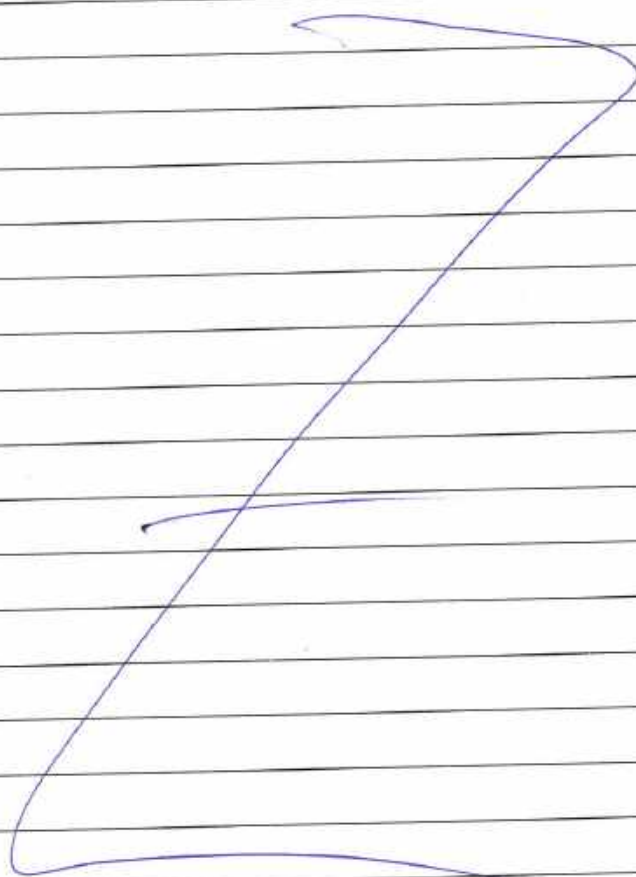

~~As~~ ^{For} example, according to Rosstat, a Russian data agency, 33% of people with university degree in Russia are either economists or lawyers. Such proficit in ~~such~~ those specialists ~~at~~ results in a high competition on the Russian market, therefore, economists and lawyers have small wages, compared to European countries, also according to Rosstat. Nowadays, more and more ^{Russian} students choose economics or law as their field of study, despite the obvious fact that such specialists are simply unwanted.

This example shows, that the choice of a field of study is indeed important. When no jobs are available after graduating ^{the university} that leaves a student with nothing, no guarantee for a good life. To avoid this, I believe that ~~so~~ adolescents should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field, so the original claim is true.

In conclusion, I would like to say that

Our whole life consists of endless attempts of achieving different goals. And a lot of people may see any means taken to achieve it as justifiable. But I strongly disagree with that.

In my opinion, there has to be a certain limit of what one may do to achieve his goal, no matter how worthy it seems to be.

To prove my point, I want to discuss some reasons and examples that could be used to challenge my position. Basically, attaining any goal is an actual challenge. You face a dozen of complications during this process. And very often to overcome them many people sacrifice something important.

For example, it can be relationships with people that you care about or your favourite hobby. And it seems to me, that it is never worth it. When you achieve this goal, you feel empty. As I see it, this achievement won't bring that much satisfaction. To attain it, you gave up a part of your life. This is why it is not worth it.

Also I would like to discuss the point that ^{one's} ~~best~~ methods sometimes ^{may} affect other people. A person that is trying to achieve

His goal may not see that he influences others in a negative way. Very often workers would do everything for a promotion, for example. They ~~might~~^{could} forget about empathy, which is unacceptable. We need to remember that there are other human beings who also have feelings. And we can't say that our comfort is more important than theirs. Everybody is equal.

In conclusion, I want to say that it is a personal choice when it comes to ways of achieving the goal. But ~~when it~~ it simply can not have a negative impact on other people. At that ^{point} it stops being personal. And in my opinion, people should be very careful even if it influences only their life. I think that not any means taken ^{a really good} to obtain it are justifiable. Many of them might simply be morally wrong.

If a goal is worthy, then any means^{taken} to attain it are justifiable.

Some people think, that if a goal is worthy, then any means^{taken} to attain it are justifiable. I completely disagree with this statement. I really believe that the ways of reaching goals matter as much as the goals themselves. To support my position I am going to give several reasons to support my position.

To begin with, the meaning of "worthy goal" is very subjective. It varies from person to person. For a particular person or, for instance, group of people the goal is worthy and they try to achieve it no matter what, but for others it is vice versa.

This shows that we can't actually say is the aim good or not or is it worthy, because for all people it is different.

Secondly, the ways of reaching the goals really matter. If you cheated or broke the law while attaining the aim, you didn't achieve it, as for me. Only by honest actions the goal can be actually completed. If we ~~do~~ do inevitable actions to achieve our aims, there would be lies, cheating and ~~reality~~ lack of trust in our world.

There are a lot of examples in history when good intentions led to bad actions. For example, during wars use lies and even torture to achieve their goals, and lots of people were harmed. This shows that we should really care about how we complete our goals, because it can affect other people.

To conclude, I want to say that, of course, you should always try to achieve your goals and desires and never give up. But you also should care about other people and think about the consequences of your actions

Nowadays a lot of controversial topics are being discussed. Some topics can be strongly connected with people's lives. There is a popular saying: "If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable." Now I'm going to comment on it and give my opinion on the topic.

Personally, I believe this idea is dangerous for humanity. It is important to stay compassionate and kind in the modern world. A lot of people in modern world don't think about consequences of their actions towards other people. ~~For this and~~ ~~then~~ If a person who aims to achieve something will forget about being human, being kind, polite, other people will suffer from that. One's choices strongly affect our lives. If this person, who chose to achieve the goal with any means taken, is in power, whole ~~countries~~ ~~of~~ cities and countries will suffer. ~~There~~ There are some examples of powerful people that destroyed ~~other~~ other people's destinies. For example, Hitler and Napoleon. So, not any means can be taken to attain a goal. Those means should not harm one's feelings and lives.

Moreover, I believe that not every goal ~~is~~ is worthy enough. It is almost impossible for regular people to have a great goals that are worthy enough. Mostly, people's dreams are rather simple. For instance, dreams about career, happiness, new car. These goals ~~are~~ are not worthy, because they just influence few lives. They are not useful for the societies or for the future. Because of that they don't cost so much. The goal can be worthy for one person, but that doesn't mean that any means could be taken to fulfill it.

In conclusion, I think that ~~the~~ ~~person~~ not every goal is worthy. And that not any means ~~taken~~ ~~to~~ could be taken to attain it. It's important for people to stay human and think about their surroundings.

University students should base their choice on the availability of jobs.

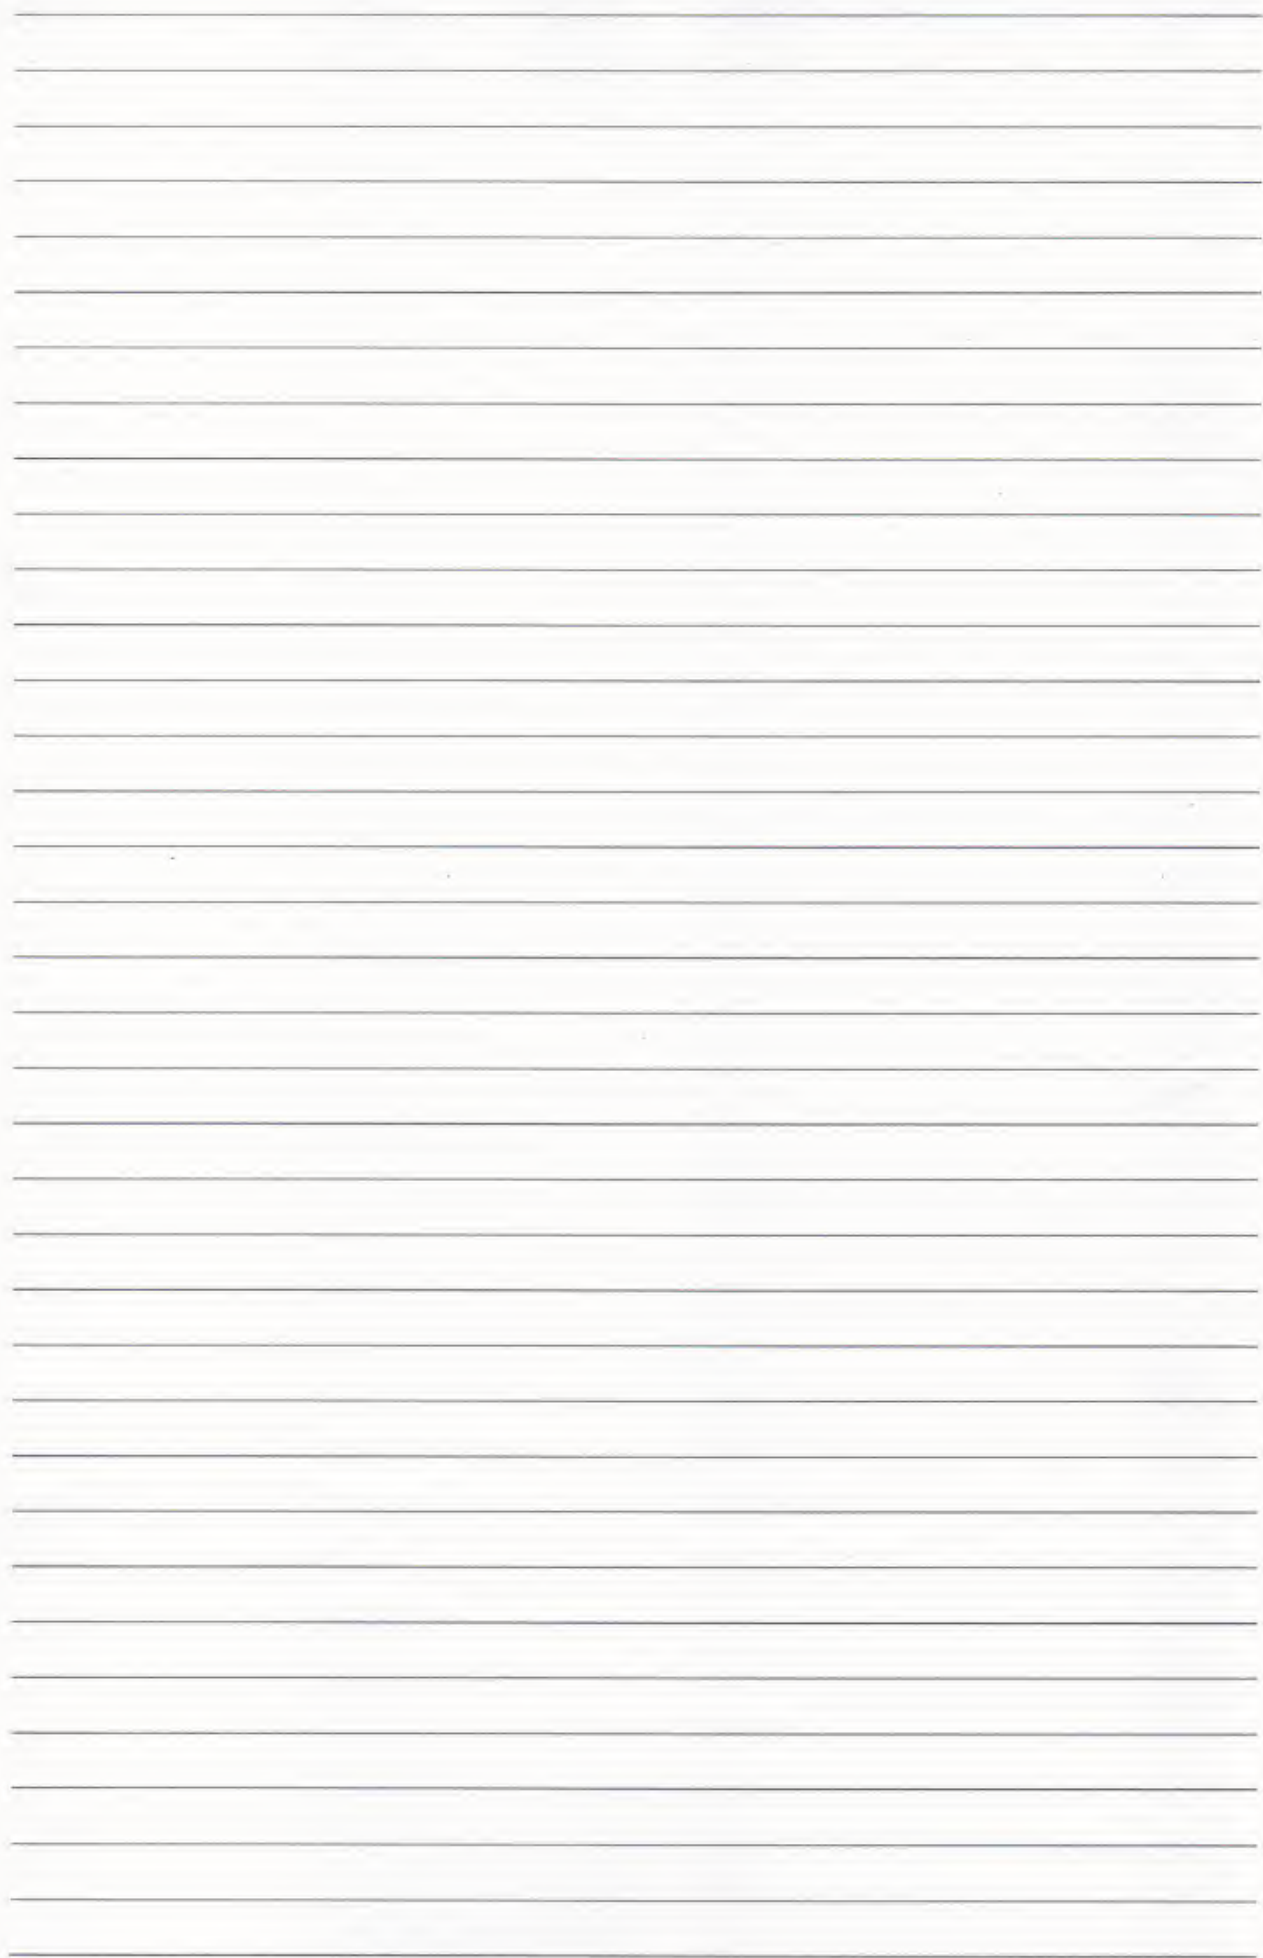

Nowadays some people believe that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. I strongly support this opinion.

Education and future career are the things that a student must care about the most. It is in his or her interest to get a stable and well-paid job. The availability of jobs is very important to look into. When a person is sure that there will be no problems in getting a job, life becomes much easier.

You can't do your best in school or university if you don't believe in getting a prestige job afterwards.

Of course, lots of people can not agree with this. They say that a student must pursue his or her dreams and base their choice of a field of study on their love for the jobs. I can understand their point of view, but I believe that looking into the availability of jobs is as important as looking into the difficulty of the education. You can't argue with the fact that if you aren't sure you will even be able to ~~finish~~ graduate from a university and get a degree, you shouldn't choose that field of study.

All in all, I think there ought to be no doubt that the availability of jobs is one of the most important things to be considered by students when choosing a field of study.

I am about to discuss on what university students should base their choice of a field of study. Some people are convinced that they should base it on the availability of jobs in that field. I totally agree with this statement and I am going to explain why.

First of all, it is better for the students themselves. If they know that there are a lot of jobs available in the field of study, that they will choose it surely. The reason for that is that employers are more likely to hire you if there are a lot of requests of this kind of job. So that students will know that they can get a well-paid job in the future and become successful in their field.

Secondly, it is better for a country as well. If there are lots of requests of the job, then it means that a country lacks it. That is really unpleasant for the economy of this country. So if students rely on the availability they will see think that a job is prospective and they will choose it.

The fact is that students will be less stressful and anxious about their future job as they already know that their chosen profession is demanded by the country. Some students are so nervous about their future job that they often change their opinion and can't choose the right option for them. So basing their choice on the availability of a job will increase the well-being and academic performance of students.

As a conclusion I can say that ~~this~~ this statement is true. It will be better for the country and students themselves if they base the choice of their career on the availability of jobs in their field of study.

I concur with the viewpoint that many important discoveries or creations are accidental. It goes without saying that science is a wide sphere which includes a lot of topics connected to each other.

I think, it is very interesting to know how people discoveries are made. I concur with the viewpoint that many important discoveries or creations are accidental. Obviously, a lot of them were made as a result of complicated researchings and hard work of scientists. However, I ~~to~~ believe that discoveries can be made by chance.

I guess that getting the answer to the question while doing working on the other problem can be possible due to the fact that ~~even~~ the science includes a lot of themes which are connected to each other. Not only the one ~~part~~ ^{part} sphere of science can have similar themes with others but also ~~it~~ can be a part of ~~the other~~ ^{also} of a bigger sphere. For example, some chemistry's reactions ~~as are~~ depends on Physics.

~~The~~ Moreover, during the process we always have side effects and ~~it~~ ~~so~~ they can lead to wrong result. Despite this fact, this result result can be successful too. ~~but in fact~~ In history there are many ~~to~~ proves of my opinion.

As an example, Columb wanted to find a way to India but discovered a new continent. He made it by chance.

To sum up, there are a great amount of ways to discover something important and useful for future generation. If you are lucky and clever, you can do it.

There is a commonly held belief that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. Frankly speaking, I suppose that the amount of jobs available in a particular field should not be the main factor of students' choice. Therefore, I disagree with the aforementioned statement.

First and foremost, the availability of jobs in some field doesn't guarantee the fact that this job will appeal to you. We have always been taught to choose a profession that is considered to be popular to find a job place more quicker. The other side of the coin is that such popular professions ~~are~~ might not fit all the people or students that are at crossroads of their future career path. Choosing this way, a plethora of people turn out to be not on their place, with hatred towards their job. Instead, it is prudent to lean towards the career field you truly like. Enjoying your job is a much more important criteria.

Moreover, it's worth to mention that in most cases the amount of jobs available ~~at~~ in some field imply ~~many~~ competition. It can be not an easy task to get even a placement in such spheres. Some people argue that you'll never be able to find a well-paid job in the sphere you like. However, there are plenty of examples of people in different areas ~~the~~ proving that nothing is impossible. There are many options to find a job regardless of the availability in that particular field.

In conclusion, I would like to reiterate that the amount of available jobs should not impact on student's choice of a field of study. It is vital to ~~be~~ choose the career path and the sphere of study that you like.

Nowadays there is a heated debate on how moral it is to attain a goal by any means possible. Supporters of the idea state that if an aim is justifiable, then any methods to achieve it are acceptable. Opponents argue that accomplishing a goal "by fair means and foul" can result in disastrous consequences. In this essay I will share my viewpoint on the topic.

Personally, I fully disagree with the claim. To my mind, "any" means include damaging and harmful methods, and such methods bring suffer to people. I am sure that if a goal is really valuable and worthy, it can be achieved by harmless means. Sometimes people neglect this idea as accomplishing an aim through non-violent methods takes more time.

To support my reasoning, I'd like to give an example from the history of India. Mohatma Ghandi, an Indian ^{politician} ~~politician~~ and philosopher, was the one to advocate for the independence of India from the UK. Although many Indian people were convinced that only ruthless methods would work, Mohatma Ghandi believed that the independence could be ^{gained} ~~achieved~~ by non-violent ways. Under his authority various political meetings were held, and gradually India became an independent state. Mohatma Ghandi's deeds are a great instance how a meaningful goal can be accomplished by harmless methods.

All things considered, I firmly believe that any worthy goal can be attained by fair means. We should bear in mind that no aim is justifiable if ~~it~~ achieving it does damage to ourselves and other people.

I completely agree with the claim that all parents should be required to volunteer time to their children's schools. As far as I am concerned, parents play a crucial role in education of their children and being actively involved in their school allows parents to stay connected and engaged in their child's learning experience.

When parents volunteer at their children's schools they provide indispensable support for the education system and also show their children ^{a great} importance of good education. Moreover parents also can better understand the difficulties with which their children face on a day-to-day. Parents can support their children in

In my opinion, volunteering provides parents ^{difficult situations} with the opportunity to improve relationships with teachers and school staff. Working together will help them get closer. When parents are interested and involved in their children's education, children, in turn, are more motivated to achieve high results.

Besides, volunteering at schools can help parents to develop new skills and learn ~~new~~ something interesting ^{and unknown}. Unlike children, parents have special resources as money for example, they can improve the learning environment by making a positive contribution to it, they can create something useful to improve the learning space. Sometimes they can buy necessary things:

In conclusion, requiring parents to volunteer at their children's schools is a beneficial and necessary thing. This ~~is~~ undoubtedly has an important effect on the ~~learning~~ learning environment. I strongly agree with the assertion that many significant discoveries and creations are accidental. Often, it's while pursuing one line of inquiry that we stumble upon an answer to something else entirely. This phenomenon highlights the unpredictable nature of innovation and the vital role of serendipity in human advancement. The path to discovery is rarely linear; instead, it's often a winding road where unexpected turns can lead to groundbreaking results.

One of the most compelling examples is the discovery of penicillin by Alexander Fleming. He wasn't actively seeking an antibiotic; rather, his work with bacteria was interrupted by a chance contamination in one of his petri dishes. This seemingly insignificant accident led to the recognition of penicillin's antibacterial properties, which revolutionized medicine and saved countless lives. This demonstrates ~~that~~ how a chance event, when paired with astute observation, can trigger a revolutionary breakthrough.

In conclusion, while not all advancements are purely accidental, many significant discoveries and creations do result from serendipitous encounters while pursuing other questions. These accidents are not failures, but are often the most fruitful avenues for exploring and improving the world around us. They highlight how important it is to have open minds and to always be ready to take a different path than originally intended.

Many Nowadays, many students dedicate a vast amount of time to their volunteer work. In this way, they make a better version of themselves. But, why did they decide choose the position of an active person? In my opinion, the most compelling reason for this is that they look up to their parents, and their principles, and their actions to change something.

The position of an active parent is meaningful and respectful ~~to~~ not only for other parents, but, also, for their children. Our parents are an example of imitation for their children. They look at them and try to become better. Moreover, other parents respect you and they always rely on you in a different way. Of course, not many parents have so much time to do this but even a minor dedication to their children's school can ~~have~~ ^{make} a profound influence ~~or~~ impact on a various things. When a parents volunteer their time, a child may see that he is valueable and meaningful for ~~their~~ ^{his} parents. And in the future this child could become an example of imitation for his ~~child~~ children as well. Parents don't need to be pathetic and lazy.

To sum it all up, I would like to say that all parents should be required to volunteer time to their children's schools. In this way, they ~~would~~ ^{will} show an example ~~to~~ of an active and reliable person. You will be distinguished in the school commitment and everybody will know you as a ~~significant~~ ^{not pathetic} person. And this is essential for your better life, and ~~for your role in the society.~~

Being loyal to your goals is a very nice character trait one can possess. Some ~~aims~~ require a lot of. Sometimes it takes a lot of effort and time to fulfill one's dream. So the question is: if a goal is really worthy, are any means taken to attain it are justifiable?

To begin with, when estimating ^{your} one's goal to decide whether it is worth the efforts, your most crucial ~~the~~ values should be ~~can~~ taken into account. If you have to betray your life principles, for instance, ~~make~~^{do} something illegal or abandon your family in need, then the ~~means to the~~ goal cannot be justified. ~~The~~ Everybody's ~~should~~ first aim should be to remain human no matter what. ~~That is~~ Consequently, when your goal goes against it, it ~~is~~ must be altered so that it corresponds with your true values. In ~~that~~ that case, the means taken have to be compared with your ~~and~~ global principles.

Another aspect that should be taken into note is that you ~~do~~ ^{not} must become manic because of your goal. The ~~targets~~ goals should be weighed consciously, allowing you to understand if it is worth it. It is necessary to let yourself relax, ~~and~~ so if in order to fulfill your dream you have to forget about your health, it can lead to severe psychological traumas.

It is not normal for anyone. Your ^{aims} goals have to be adequate and your opportunities should be estimated correctly. Sometimes it is important to seek ~~for~~ professional guidance, for example, contact a therapist. When your goal makes you too nervous or you are not able to handle the stress, it is not worth it.

To sum it up, sometimes our goals do not worth the efforts no matter how important it seems to ^{us} be. Evaluate your ~~true~~ Not any means taken are justifiable when it comes to something more valuable ~~as~~ in comparison

One cannot deny that choosing of your future job is significant^{decision} because it will be difficult to change it later. There is an opinion that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. To my mind, it's wrong. I disagree with it. I believe that students should base their choice on their preferences and ^{their} passion to a certain job.

Firstly, everyone knows the quote of the Chinese philosopher, 'If you choose a job you love, you will never work.' I'm convinced that students should follow this statement because if they choose a field of study leading to a job ^{they} love, they will never have burnout and they will do tasks correctly without laziness.

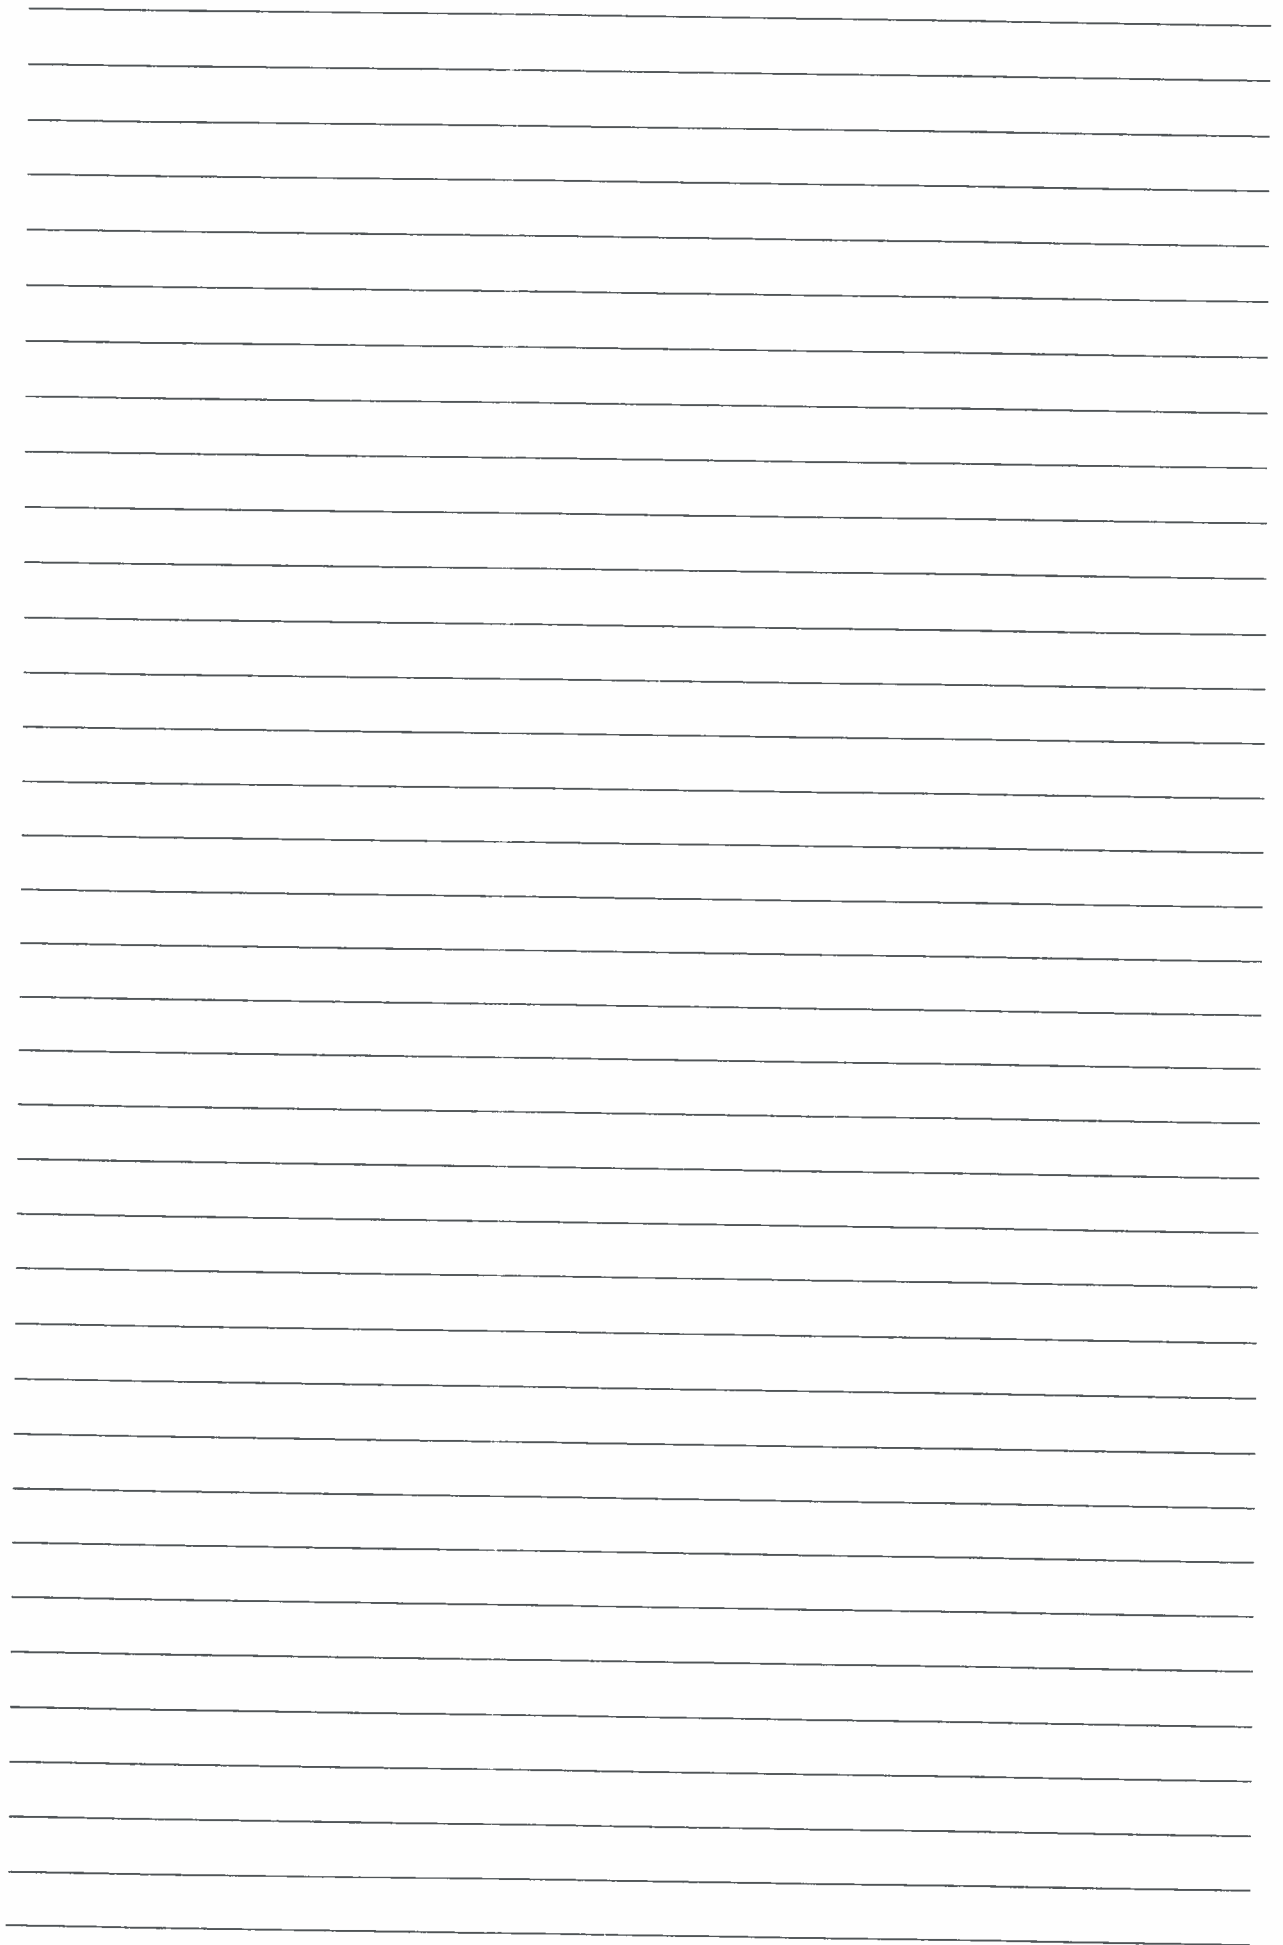

Secondly, modern students can get almost every job they want because there are many courses ~~of~~ aimed at getting another job or at getting higher qualification^{in all ways}. Also, social lift now is more available than during the last century.

← Last but not least, the availability of jobs in a certain field can be ~~changed~~^{different} by at the moment when students will have got a ~~free~~ professional skills for these jobs, therefore they will have education they can't use ^{and} no desire to work in this field.

On balance, I believe that students should estimate their determination to get a job they want, even if it is really hard, and decide if they eager to overcome all obstacles on a way to their dream job.

Getting the job of your dream can be considered as the 'trump card'.

There have always been many debates concerning the issue of what means should ~~be~~ and should ~~not~~ be ~~used~~ ^{not taken} in order to achieve a goal. Some people assume that if a goal is worthy, then it is appropriate to take any measures to reach it, while others believe that prior to taking any actions one should think what means are socially acceptable and what are not. Personally, I agree that people should decide what measures to take in accordance with social rules. Otherwise, they can face terrible consequences.

Firstly, the more people are allowed to do, the more unsatisfied they become. If the society approves of any means ^{that are taken to achieve a goal}, then people will experience a lot of hardships. It can start from ~~experiencing~~ simple misdemeanors and end with terrible crimes that will cause people feel a constant fear. Therefore, everyone should know the limits and rules that couldn't be broken.

In addition, if talking about people in particular, some of them can suffer the loss of their belongings and even relatives, because of the nonchalant attitude of others. When a person is focused on reaching a certain goal, ~~they~~ rarely do they care about others. Hence, absolutely innocent people may suffer casualties.

whereas those who actually does prohibited actions with him in prosperity.

In balance, approving at any taken measures in order to achieve a goal is not a way to the bright future. When taking actions in order to reach something, people should think twice before making a decision.

Nowadays, education is a really important field, and many people are considering it as a main part of human's life. That is why many statements connected to education have been made recently. For example, it is believed that parents whose children ~~study in~~ are studying in schools should not only pay for their kids' education, but also help these schools physically and manually. It strikes me that parents had better spend time volunteering in schools, because they will benefit from it themselves.

First of all, parents can help their children's schools to develop and upgrade. With the physical help of parents, schools will become cleaner and more modernised, and the level of teaching will be heightened. Schools' facilities will be ameliorated if the measures are taken. Moreover, parents can ^{share} their opinions on the schools' ^{studying process} ~~contributions~~ with the head teachers and improve it together, making it more convenient for students and ^{teachers} ~~teachers~~.

Secondly, parents who help others and enhance the world together are the best examples of acceptable behavior for their children. Kids who see their parents, helping the school and collaborating, may become kinder and more warm-hearted. It is a perfect opportunity to raise children's awareness to ~~making~~ good behavior.

Taking everything into consideration, parents' attendance to schools and their volunteering can improve schools and children's behavior. Everybody will benefit from it, therefore, it is worth being organised.

The question of choosing field of study at the University becomes more and more relevant to students every year in our fast-changing world. Entering the University, people want to be sure that their future job will be needed and that they could earn their living doing it. However, almost every person has some doubts about that. That is why some of them base their choice only on the availability of jobs in that field. In my opinion, this idea is actually not the best one. To support my point of view, I would like to give the following arguments. Firstly, when you are deciding which field of study to explore you should rely mostly on your interest in the subjects which are going to be taught to you. Getting University education is a long process which takes a lot of time and effort. If your choice is made only because of the big number of jobs available, it will not give you neither groundbreaking success nor pleasure. Secondly, Universities usually support their students giving them advices and professional help with building future career. So, there is no use to worry all the time and eat yourself from the inside in order to choose the field of study most required in your country or abroad. Unfortunately, another problem is that relatives or friends could press on you to make preference to the jobs accessible and those which do not depend on current trends. The remedy to this issue is as simple as it could be, though. You can take their advices into consideration but in the end of the day it is your life. Just make this important choice with your heart and soul and your future studying will not be a burden for you but will bring true happiness instead.

~~Nowadays it is really difficult to surprise a person with some new inventions and technologies. Because many people feel like the humanity has already discovered and created everything they need for their lives. But But there are still lots of unsolved enigmas about the our planet, space and Solar System, galaxy, the universe. And it is very hard,~~

Nowadays people don't understand the power of mistake. But ~~many years~~ they should say thanks to it for the world where we live. I fully agree with the statement that many important discoveries or creations are accidental. Many ~~in~~ things that help the humanity live and ~~stay strong~~ and explore the world were invented or found by chance because of some mistakes. ~~At school~~

During the lessons of Biology at schools students are often told about the history of peniciline. Actually, Albert Fleming, the discoverer of that medical substance, was ~~taking his~~ doing researches on mushrooms. While examining them, he found an unidentified substance. He thought that it can be added to some chemicals that will hasten the growth of plants. But unexpectedly he found out that it can also positively affect the living creature, especially if it is ill. That is the story of peniciline which cured millions of lives since ^{its} first use on the ^{1st} human.

~~The same~~ Another story ^{accidental} of discovery is about the ^{colour} spectrum of the light. Isaac Newton had always been very fanatic about science, as many people thought those times. Sometimes the scientist stayed at home with no light for weeks and months, especially during the plague epidemic situation. He had only a small window in the door that let the light go into the room. Once the light focused on the ^{placed} prism on the table and it showed ~~red~~ seven different colours: red, orange, yellow, green, light blue, ^(or cyan) dark blue and purple. So, by ~~the~~ the will of the God or just because of the mixture of circumstances, the people found out the secret of white light^{ns}.

To conclude, it must be said that people should not be afraid of making mistakes. They help people to follow the path to truth, change the knowledge and sometimes change the whole world.

If a goal is worthy, then any means to ~~achieve~~ attain it are justifiable. Personally, I couldn't agree more with this statement.

It goes without saying that every person has dreams. And to achieve those dreams the person sets goals. Everyone, without exceptions, has to overcome the struggle and all the obstacles in order to attain their goals. In my opinion, fulfilling your dreams is a primary point of the existence itself. So, I'll explain why any means to attain worthy goals are justifiable.

The main reason I advocate for this statement is a moral obligation to yourself. Imagine achieving all of your dreams, living in abundance and fertility. This might be the best feeling: the feeling of freedom and success. If you were to experience it once, you would have done anything to make it stay forever. On the other hand, imagine breaking that promise to yourself. Now you live in depression and despise yourself for not taking action for the dreams to come true.

The other important reason for me to support this statement is becoming the best version of yourself. I believe that pain that comes alongside success shapes you as an entity. Everything that doesn't kill you makes you stronger, that's why every step that you make towards success is absolutely worth it.

In conclusion, I strongly believe that attaining your goals and making your dreams come true is the very point of our existence, so every action you take that benefits your goals is necessary and cannot be criticized.

Some people believe that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. This opinion does not resonate with me at all. I am convinced that there are certain things that cannot be done to achieve any goal, no matter how important it is. Among such things are laws and both written in Constitution and in Bible (or moral laws). In my opinion, people do not have the right to break these laws. So means such as unfairness, fraud, and violence cannot be justifiable.

To support my idea, I would like to look at ~~few~~^{an} examples from literature. A lot of writers all over the world showed in their works that not any means taken to attain a goal are justifiable. For instance, Dostoevsky wrote a book which is called Crime and Punishment where he proved that breaching the laws on the way of achieving one's goals leads to punishment and never ~~get~~^{helps} to get to the worthy goal. A main character had a goal of redressing the poverty and setting the fairness.

in the society. However, he chose the wrong way of achieving this aim. He did not follow the laws of morality and made a crime. It did not make him closer to his goal. On the contrary, he spoiled his life. Better examples can be met in books written by Chekhov. He wrote about a man who sacrificed himself and his wife ^{in a way of living on a small budget} in order to achieve his goal: live in a house and eat gooseberries every day. He did not break the law, although his wife died because of hunger. But he forgot about other people as he had only one thing on his mind - his dream or goal. He was not a good person. And his goal did not worth that he degraded. It can be concluded that authors show us that we have to leave real people on the way of achieving our goals.

There are some more examples ^{in the real world.} that show that not every means taken to complete a goal is justifiable. ^{For example,} There are some people who want to get a great job and use unfair methods to do it. Or some people who desire to make a fortune and do some affairs that help get it faster. In the end such people pay for their unfair means of obtaining a goal.

To conclude, I firmly believe that ^{achieving} goals does not have to break rules and ^{do} make harm to others.

There is a common opinion that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. One should admit that it sounds quite sensible. What can be better than a long-term durable strategy? Notwithstanding, I am inclined to believe that it is far more perspective to listen to your inner voice and bear in mind your own passions and talents than follow labour market statistics as if you are blindfolded. Now let me support my disagreement with the statement.

First and foremost, we live in the non-stop developing world where the list of available jobs tends to fluctuate constantly. It generally depends on the level of technological advance, social and economic policy of the government. So, it is highly unlikely to make a credible prediction of the future of the majority of jobs. If you are on the verge of entering a university, I suggest that you should prioritise your interests not particular jobs because the labour market might change out of recognition in 4 years.

Secondly, when a person focuses on the range of available jobs, they forget about such phenomena as burning out. People dream of high salaries and stop pursuing their passions if they find them ~~not~~ not prestigious enough. Nevertheless, I reckon that there is always a bunch of opportunities for further development in those fields that are considered to be unable to reach the leading position. If you have a passion, do not let any obstacles to appear on your way.

All things considered, I would like to express hope that university students will gain an insight that it is not necessary to ^{base their choice of} choose a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field.

In modern world, it is hardly possible to stay faithful to the principles you have. Aspiring to achieve a goal or reach success, many of us are ready to do almost anything to get what they desire. To my mind, such behaviour is totally wrong and disrespectful.

To begin with, let me clarify my position. I am ~~deeply~~ certain that no matter what your goal is, only adequate measures ~~are acceptable~~ of achieving it are acceptable. First, we have to understand whether the goal is really worthy and, while determining it, we have to be as objective as possible. Second, if we are sure that our goal is worth all the effort needed, we have to remember how ignorant and selfish it is to lessen the importance of everyone else's needs.

On the contrary, there ~~are~~ is a certain number of arguments that object to such a position. For example, the result you achieve by being selfish at times can be truly pleasing. Moreover, you can understand that you will not spend your whole life communicating with ^{the} people you do now; therefore, it is not a crime to prioritise your needs.

However, I am still convinced that having such a background, although being in a favourable position, is not a remarkable feat at all.

In conclusion, it goes without saying that every person will act ~~in~~ the way they think it is right to, but each of us should remember about basic moral principles and ~~showing the importance~~ the significance of being sympathetic to each other.

By doing and acting so, we will be able to make our society more ~~less~~ honest to a certain degree.

Nowadays universities play a huge role in our lives. The most complicated choice one has to make is what. Choosing a field of study is ~~an~~ a very controversial complicated matter. Some people think that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. In my opinion they are completely wrong.

To begin with, if one opt for a field of study they are not interested in, it will result in negative consequences. For example, a student who detests what they are doing does not only feel miserable, but also is not able to study well. In addition, ~~pro~~ a profession is something that a person should enjoy. Because if ~~the opposite~~ an individual hates his or her ~~field~~ job, they will not be good workers. That could ~~result~~ lead to ~~low salary to the that low~~ ~~salary unhappy people~~ bad quality of offered products or offers one makes, so a lot of people will be dissatisfied.

Furthermore, our world is changing rapidly. That is why one profession can be popular now but in the nearest future will die down. For example, when robots were invented, many people lost their jobs. Thus, it is highly possible that by the time you graduate from ~~an~~ a university, availability of jobs in your chosen field of study will ~~be~~ not be the same.

However, some people ~~believe~~ think that by ~~opting~~ ~~for~~ a field of study ~~opting~~ for a field of study that has a lot of available jobs is the best choice. ~~though~~ Despite the fact that in some cases it may be right, it is more of an exception than ~~the~~ a rule that availability of jobs in a field will not change over years.

To conclude, it is ~~not~~ crucial to ~~choose~~ choose a ~~right~~ field of study you are interested in. If you ~~not~~ base your choice on other things, it will not be a good one.

It goes without saying that a lot of people are ambitious and want to achieve their goals. But if a goal is worthy, does it mean that any ways to attain it are justifiable?

My personal answer is no. There is a sensible saying: "Your freedom ends at the point where the freedom of other's begins". To my mind, no matter how major the goal is, one shouldn't break the law, betray closest friends or family members or take any other actions which will negatively affect the ~~lives~~ lives of people around or be harmful for the society in general.

~~Moreover, the price of attaining~~
Moreover, the psychological side of the issue also worth mentioning. If a price of attaining a goal is too high, it's doubtful whether the final result will bring you the feeling of satisfaction. When it comes to achieving desired, people tend to forget about the moral principles and values they used to have. Thus, their stubborn and arrogant behaviour can lead to losing connections with their acquaintances. ~~After~~ ~~finding common ground with~~ After some time you might find yourself in a situation, when you achieved success, but you have nobody to share it with. In this case ~~the lack of close bonds and meaningful interpersonal communication will spoil one's feeling of delight~~ ~~approaching~~

All in all, I believe this topic is a double-edged sword and ~~it is~~ ^{it is} up to each person ~~whether~~ to decide whether the accomplished mission outweigh all the possible negative consequences. Talking about me, I would rather ~~put~~ work hard and put a lot of effort into attaining my goals without crossing the line of being dishonest ~~and~~ selfish ~~for~~ and violent person, who takes into account only their own interests and priorities.

⊗ ~~after~~ after successfully approaching something.

In this day and age, deciding on one's future job is one of the most pivotal and difficult ~~steps~~ tasks. Some people believe that university students should base their choice of a field of study only on the availability of jobs in that field while others are sceptical about it. In this essay I am going to express my opinion on this matter.

To begin with, there are some students that still cannot ~~decide~~ make a choice which profession they would like to pursue. In such cases, knowing ~~re~~ recent information about situation on labor market is beneficial as young people may base their choice on lucrative and promising careers that are ~~at the~~ available now and do not waste their & valuable time consuming ~~information~~ useless information for not in-demand field of study. Moreover it can prevent them ~~becoming~~ ^{from not well-paid jobs} from burnout ~~and~~ in a long run.

Secondly, regardless of how & sincerely one loves what he or she does for living if there is no job to do, no one will pay for it. To be more specific nowadays, AI is truly popular and can replace some professions at all ~~cause~~ as the its influence on our society is becoming more and more everyday. For this reason, many people may ~~lose~~ their jobs ~~at a~~ and, apparently, the money outcome this atrocities may ~~&~~ cause the increasing unemployment rate which can reflect badly on the economy of the country.

Considering all reasons and examples I have mentioned before, I ~~for~~ firmly believe that it is essential for young people to be aware of the situation on labor market and try to base their choices on the main aspects to make decision properly.

It is believed that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. This topic has remained current since ancient times, people have discussed it for many years, but they have not found a clear answer yet.

Personally, I can not fully agree with this statement. For example, I know that it is a common practice during wars to sacrifice one hundred people's lives to save one thousand, yet I still consider such methods inappropriate. It is not just about wars, examples are everywhere. A worthy goal requires certain actions and hard work, but you must not forget how valuable resources you use are. If achieved, such goal may not ^{bring} give you any ~~satisfy~~ pleasure, only regrets of losing things you used while working on it. There are a lot of examples of sacrificing entire cities and thousands of people to save important objects or protect a king or a queen. Such actions have ^{also} ~~always~~ been considered reasonable, but not many people have ever thought about the cruelty of this opinion. Undoubtedly, saving strategically important objects during wars is vital, this goal is more than worthy. Nevertheless, I strongly believe that people's lives are above all. Another examples of ~~sacrificing~~^{losing} valuable things to ~~achieve~~^{achieve a} certain goal are people who use others to get as much money as possible. Having money is necessary, yet it ~~doesn't~~ does not cost any ruined lives.

Nowadays robs and murders in order to steal money are more than common, which is very sad.

In addition, following a worthy goal is an approvable thing to do unless it requires sacrificing people's lives, losing friends or something valuable, so I can not agree with the statement given.

No matter what, we must not forget about resources we use to achieve our goals.

~~However~~ It is a common opinion nowadays that achieving our goals is crucial in order to be successful. Consequently, when working on reaching them, any means taken are justifiable. From my point of view, it is not always the case, ~~and~~ and this essay is aimed to explain why. First of all, I offer to apply for one of the most famous Russian novel "Crime and Punishment", written by Fyodor Dostoevsky. The theory of ~~the~~ the main character, Rodion Raskolnikov, was based on the belief that in order to change the world for the better it is worth to sacrifice some human's lives. ~~and~~ if they, according to his opinion, are useless. Undoubtedly, ~~the~~ ^{his} goal ~~was~~ was noble. Nevertheless as it turned out, his decision to kill an old lady did not make any sense, but brought him great amount of suffering. ~~and the history of 20th century also~~ The history of 20th century also gave us many examples of ~~cases~~ cases when ~~some~~ measures taken to attain a goal were not justifiable. As far as I am concerned, revolutions and establishment of Socialistic regimens were connected with a terrible number of human's victims. On the one hand, those processes were supposed to reach equality or independence. On the other hand, human life is the most important thing in the world, therefore death of millions people can not be justified.

To conclude ~~the~~ I do not want to say that ~~its~~ people should stop trying to achieve their goal when faced any obstacles. What I am essentially arguing is that maintaining of some values ~~is~~ ~~have too big~~ ~~is~~ more significant than reaching goals. For example, to remain a human.

Recently, people around the globe started to raise the question of parents' involvement in their children's education. I strongly believe that it is a parent's duty to devote their time to schools in order to know what their child studies and how they study. There is a number of arguments to support this opinion.

First things first, a parent must ^{be informed} ~~inquire~~ about their child's grades, and ensure that they are justified. It is often that teachers lower their students' grades due to personal grudges against them. Although it is important to treat students according to their behaviour, such actions could only demotivate and discourage children from learning. A parent should confront teachers who treat their children unprofessionally and immorally. Moreover, if the child treats their teachers disrespectfully, it is a matter that parents should step into before it escalates.

"But parents don't have time for that," some might say. While it is true that parents have enough chores already, it is a responsibility that they take on when they have a child. Besides, volunteering time to education only involves occasional school visits, parent meetings, and communicating with their children. Most parents ^{are} ~~are~~ afraid of putting in some extra time that they would otherwise spend not communicating with their child.

In conclusion, a parent is responsible for how their child is treated and for how their child treats education and others. They are the ones raising the new generation, and it is vital to ~~show them~~ be a worthy example to this generation. Assisting children in their education is the least a parent can do to raise them right.

After finishing school adolescents face a very serious problem of what should they study at the university. There is a widely spread belief that their decision should be based on whether the jobs in that field are available. To my mind, it is a right strategy of choosing the university program and I am going to give some arguments in support of my opinion.

To start with, it is essential for a person, who has just graduated from the university, that finding his first job will not be a very long and difficult ^{process}. Nowadays it is important for young people to start earning their own money as soon as it is possible, so one should see that a choice of jobs opportunities exists and he will not be left unemployed.

Moreover, it is quite obvious that the majority of people is eager to become very wealthy and not be burdened by financial problems. To achieve it, they should be ~~desire~~ desired ~~employers~~ employers, therefore, their job should be needed in the society. So, if your sphere of work is actual, you can become a successful ~~and~~, get a great payment and have a lot of job prospects.

Summing up, I would like to say, that even if ~~doing not popular~~, but pleasant to you job is ~~considered to be great~~ studying pleasant to you subjects may seem great, ~~people~~ ^{you} should think about other things, such as future opportunities, too. I believe ~~that~~ that people should pay attention to the availability of jobs to have less troubles with building their future careers and living happy life, as having enough money for all your needs ~~is~~ is really important.

Creative writing - Topic № 1.

Nowadays many people think that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. I personally, fully disagree with such ~~wied~~ viewpoint, even though it is still valid.

To begin with, ~~the~~ modern teenagers are usually more interested in jobs, ~~that~~ which are somehow connected with art. But, to be honest, such jobs are not really required and there are plenty of people in this field. Nevertheless, there is still a point to say. If someone is a good professional and loves his/her job, this person will be required as a worker.

Next reason not to give up and to choose ~~something~~ you want to do and not something that is required is more psychological. Imagine waking up every morning and understanding that you have to go to work that you literally hate. And it lasts for a few decades. Rather depressing, is not it? Thus, if you do what you do not like at all, it might lead to serious psychological problems. And at the same time, work you really love will bring you constant joy, which is actually important.

To sum up, I would like to say that the choice of a field of study is hard and always makes people stressed. Nevertheless, it is not as scary as it might seem. You just should remember that mistakes are done by everyone and you always have an ability to change your life. So, if you have chosen a field of study and it dissatisfies you, you had better change it.

Creative writing - Topic № 1

The question of whether the university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field is keenly discussed nowadays. In this response I will present my point of view on this issue and give some arguments to support it.

To begin with, I strongly disagree with this statement. If students choose their career path relying only on the availability of jobs in particular field and not considering their personal preferences, they are likely to be far less efficient in doing ~~the~~ tasks in comparison with those who are keen on their work. One might argue that the passion and eagerness to do your job is not so important, and ~~many~~ people do not have any sympathy to a field that they work in and still manage their obligations well. However, recent researches show that the efficiency of an employee and his/her desire for a particular job are strongly correlated, and this ~~an~~ connection definitely affects the country's economy.

There is one more thing to be mentioned. If too many people ^{try} get a particular type of job, there is a high risk that the glut in the labour market will occur, and most of those people will be unemployed. One might claim that there is enough vacancies for all, as the ~~country's~~ country's economy is developing, and new workers are always in demand. However, the history of the economic crises show that the oversupply of the particular type of employees is not a rare thing, so putting too much emphasis on one field may lead to severe problems.

To conclude, I believe that even though the availability of the job you are hoping to apply for is quite important, your personal preferences should ~~remain~~ be in the first position.

Worthy Goal

There is a belief that if a goal is worthy then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. I totally disagree with the claim. I ~~consider it~~ ^{think that the claim is} cruel and violent.

I would like to support my position and give you the most compelling reasons. To begin with, I would like to ~~mention~~ ^{mention} ~~from~~ the disastrous events ^{from} our history.

We all remember World War I and World War II. The ruler of ~~the~~ Germany, Hitler, was blinded by his goal. He wanted to make other nations disappear.

The cruel wars led to unimaginable battles and endless deaths of ~~more~~ millions ~~people~~. My grandmother lived during World War 2. Her childhood was ruined. Her family was brutally killed and she was left alone in the cruel world. To add to this, if you sacrifice everything and everyone for your goal you will not be happy in the end. My personal experience shows that it is actually true as I sacrificed everything to become a skinner. My health ~~my~~ was absolutely ruined. It was not worth it and I was not pleased by the result and regretted ~~doing it~~ doing it.

Every statements can be challenged, so can be mine. I would like to give you examples when ~~a goal~~ a worthy goal can be justified.

First of all, ~~consider~~ I love my family. I could not live without them. Therefore, I would do anything for them. If I could ~~to~~ save them by robbing or killing someone I would do ~~a~~ that. I think ~~in~~ that most people would agree with me on this claim and justify the goal.

~~To conclude~~

To conclude, I ~~has~~ have to say that the topic is very controversial and I wish I could ~~help you~~ persuade you that ~~it is hard to~~

There is an opinion that many important discoveries or creations are accidental. It is hard to disagree with such statement due to some examples from history and personal experience of how seeking the answer to one question helps to ~~also~~ find the answer to another."

For instance, Wilhelm Röntgen, a founder of X-Ray method, accidentally put his hand in such conditions where ^{all} the bones were ~~can~~ able to be detected on the specific paper. Also it is worth mentioning how electro-magnetism was found. If I am not mistaken, it was discovered by chance by a student on the front desk on one of the lectures. The young man noticed how compass reacted to some experiments with electricity, which were shown by a teacher. This ~~small~~ little discovery has lead to many significant inventions which are now used all over the world."

In my life there are also many examples of how searching for ~~can~~ the answer to ~~one~~ one question brought me to the answer to another question. ~~Also, I can say that~~

I strongly agree that university student should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. When the most compelling counterargument stated that individuals should only study getting a degree in the field they are interested in, might be considered, I assume that in modern life our society is build on the laws of capitalism, so getting a study which will not give student an opportunity to have stability in their professional life is intimidating, as every individual should have a lucrative, stable job to earn money and close all the possible needs.

At the end of studying, a student, who spend, given-back, five years getting wiser, expect to have a success in the field to one's choice. But ultimately, if university student do not have possibilities to work, it's leading to tremendous problems in real-world life. The availability of job in the field is synonym of stability in life, when you can choose more convenient place to work or place with higher salary and more opportunities. So ultimately, that means students should consider the availability of job in the field they are studying, to be aware of the future life struggles with earning money conveniently. With the help of diverse sources, teacher, parents, students should increase their acknowledgement of the fields that promote better different types of jobs and their availability. Furthermore, students may pursue some goals when they deciding their future establishment to higher education and the field. Although, focusing on dreams may might distort from the main problem in modern society world-money. Moreover, it's just talking about financial literacy, it might be a not very thoughtful decision to promote yourself with higher education, which is typically is quite expensive, but lost the opportunity to be in the black, meaning to get all money back from your job, leading to the fact, that it is undeniably demotivating idea, which can be students as burden for many years on this why it's so important to mature this ambivalent choice. Schools should promote students in high schools with knowledge about availability of jobs in different fields, and student should to be engaged in this sort of discussions and classes.

In conclusion, availability of jobs is hot question for students in high school. If we provide them with ready information, with no doubts, university students will base their decisions on wise proclamations and facts, leading to lucrative job, better economical situation in society in long term run, and other compelling advantages. Furthermore, picking a field of study on the availability will mitigate stress on the other parts of essential parts of working, because of easier way to earn money, without seeking for at least one company, which will be interested in your unpopular degree.

Nowadays choice of a field of study still remains one of the most important choices in the life of younger adults, but should they consider their ~~their~~ degree on availability of jobs in field? Now I am going to give my opinion on it.

As we know in modern western world almost all universities require tuition fee. Of course students can get scholarships, but they are not going to cover tuition fully. So probably almost every student doesn't want to pay for tuition, that he won't be able to pay off after landing a job. For example we can take american or UK student who will major in * education. There are a lot of jobs for teachers ~~every~~ almost in every country of the world, but there is a catch. Teachers do not earn enough. So this student probably will land a job, but will be stuck with a huge student ~~at~~ loan at least for half a decade.

On the other side, there are students majoring in arts. There are almost no jobs for them! However if the student is a really talented painter or designer he can do freelance or land a decent job. ~~Everything~~ because in this field only your portfolio matters.

Also, very interesting situation is in ~~so~~ IT job market. Students, that started their degrees in computer science 4 years ago were imagining, that they will easily get a job with a decent salary, but as for right now there is a huge crisis in IT job market and now only individuals with good skillset and portfolio get good positions. Situation quite similar to so now computer science students in same boat with arts students and they were not ready for it!

So I completely disagree with statement that students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. They should consider their degrees on their passion to it and their talents.

The topic of ends and means has been discussed by everybody at some point. It is a polarizing topic, with the main biggest concern being ~~that~~ the morality of the ~~real~~ actions taken in order to reach a certain goal. There are always extremes, when it comes to morality. Any sane person understands, that being in such ~~extreme~~ fringe groups is stupid, ineffective and harmful ~~for the~~ ^{to} society. In my opinion ^{the} means not always justify the ends, ~~because~~ Violence does not justify prosperity, reaching equality does not justify giving minority groups extra rights, making apples shiny and pretty does ~~not~~ justify pumping them full of toxins and modifying them genetically. Not all means justify the ends, ~~the~~ but there are some that obviously do, ~~and these and these~~ and although not always morally correct or acceptable, such decisions push history forward. I guess why ~~saying~~, sometimes ~~the~~ only time can tell, whether the ^{ends} ~~means~~ justified the means. Let's take a polarizing topic: immigration. ~~Do the~~ ~~Does the~~ ~~deportation actually~~ ~~ha~~. Deportation ~~to~~ can splinter families, lead to hunger, death and jail time, but without any ^{measures} ~~deport~~ ~~rites~~, ~~preventing~~ ~~immie~~ controlling the flow of immigrants there would be chaos, murder in the streets and complete ~~destruction~~ destruction of society.

That is because some societies can only live in very controlled conditions due to their barbaric nature.
Let's take gene modification of humans: is it okay to destroy one's ^{own} ~~own~~ unique set of qualities that make them a human being ^{and distinguish us} just for them to have blue eyes or better muscle genetics. In my opinion - no. But doesn't that ^{disease-free} ~~cancer-free~~ life just seem like a great ^{and exciting} new world?
Wouldn't it be nice to have a beautiful face, that is completely different from your parents' faces? Although beautiful, no longer unique. These questions are debated every day and only time can tell, who is right and who is wrong. So let's try and stay on the right side of history!

I do ~~I~~ not think that any means taken to attain a goal are justifiable if it is worthy. These notion can lead to the wrong actions that can cause a lot of problems.

The first reason is an unclear term 'any'. It can include a lot of means that are not morally acceptable or they can be even abolished by the government. For instance, killing people and frauds. I know the story about the businessman Alex who wanted to become rich very quickly. He promised to pay money to many people who gave him it first. ~~They thought~~ that he would pay them more, but ~~he~~ he did not pay even a penny. Thus, Alex became utterly rich, but a lot of people became extremely poor.

The second reason is term 'worthy'. People have different opinions and values, so some of us who agree with the statement can think that there is no possibility of ~~the~~ ^{the} doing things, so they always ~~try to~~ ^{try to} end everything they want. This way can make them anxious because of the failed actions. ~~It is impar~~ ^{They impact} badly on their mental and physical health. For instance, my mother does not admit defeats. ^{She starts shouting} ~~She~~ becomes furious.

^{undoubtedly, her} ~~Her~~ reaction is not good for her happiness and health represents.

~~In conclusion~~ In conclusion, I want to say that ~~It~~ some people can ~~not~~ disagree with me because they believe that determination is the most ~~and~~ the most important feature they ~~can~~ have but determination should ~~to~~ not spoil our lives. It might be useful a ~~helpful~~ helpful tool that helps us to make ~~our~~ circumstances better and to solve the problems.

To begin with, I totally and completely disagree with the given statement. To some point, it even seems absurd to me. In every sphere of life we can find examples when attempts to reach a worthy goal would lead to horrible consequences.

Therefore I would like to dive into history. I cannot but remember ~~Nacist~~ Germany. The third Reich aimed to expand and reach prosperity, ~~that~~ its will was simple to understand: a growing country with huge ~~potential~~ economic and military potential lacked resources. However, all other peoples were ~~considered~~ ^{called} "untermenschion" that couldn't be considered human. Furthermore, Germany, in fact, planned to turn slavic nation into slavery. Trying to reach a goal that was worthy only for the nazis, the country committed a dreadful crime against humanity, which resulted in genocide, massacre and millions of deaths.

As a second argument I would like to speak about religion. At first sight any faith guarantees peace and forgiveness of sins, isn't ~~that~~ that tempting? The goal of any religion is to expand and make people believe in it. However, in the middle ages religion was the main barrier for science and research, as facts and faith are actually opposed to each other. ~~A lot~~ ^{Great} ~~of~~ scientists were burned at the stake as heretics, because they believed that the earth was round. How is that justifiable?

To sum up, I would like to note that we always have to think about the consequences of all our choices. In this essay I recalled only 2 examples from numerous terrible acts committed in the name of great goals. Behind all everything there are always opportunistic and cruel people. Humanity has to learn on its mistakes, ~~and~~ otherwise the tragedies might happen again. Innocent people's ~~life~~ lives are at stake!

I wholeheartedly believe that ends don't justify the means. I will try to explain my point of view with several arguments and examples.

First of all, the goal isn't worthy if to achieve it, you have to put the lives of innocent civilians at stake. Even the purest goals like World Peace shouldn't endanger people's lives. Human life is one of the most precious gifts given to us and we should be more considerate of that.

Secondly, worthy goals can be attained through conventional means. While this may take a longer amount of time (in comparison to other ways), it's more effective and can set a standard for others to follow.

It's also worth remembering that if people will achieve their goals by any means they see fit, it can motivate other people to do the same. This can create a cycle of struggle and hatred that will leave the world with anarchy and destruction.

Lastly, people are all different and unique, which in turn means that they can perceive the world differently. Some will see stopping World Hunger, Global Warming, wars and International Terrorism as worthy goals. But others might see genocide of a race as a worthy goal. So certain goals should never be achieved or set in the first place.

I hope I have given enough arguments as to why ends don't justify the means.

It is often thought that a goal is worth any means to achieve it. I completely disagree with this statement and think that it is vital not to use destructive methods to attain your dreams properly.

First of all, ^{I believe that} people who are using another humans while pursuing their ^{pure} interests often end up failing in their activities. For example, a man that was used one woman for ~~working~~ having a ^{quick} promotion in a company, in the end, got a higher salary and more pleasant working conditions than this girl with her immoral methods. Thus, this point proves how essential it might be to rely only on yourself while achieving your goals.

Secondly, using even cruel methods for your career or life prospects might result ~~in~~ ^{not only} not only on your mental state, but ^{on} communication with others.

For instance, in a classic novel "Crime and punishment" by F. M. Dostoevsky the main character invented his own theory, which ~~was~~ he wanted desperately to check by killing an old woman in her house. After his inappropriate action, Rostokhin ^{loses} ~~loses~~ his temper ^{completely} and suffers from anxiety and panic attacks during the whole book. Therefore, only through pure intentions can a person achieve the brilliant results in every sphere of life ~~let's~~^{you are} interested in. Moreover, it is ~~significant~~ significant to maintain a balance between good and evil for every living creature ~~for it not to be degraded~~ as it may go insane and remain without relatives and supportive friends.

In conclusion, I strongly believe that no matter how great your goals are, you need to think thoroughly before using ^{such kind of} methods that can disastrously affect ~~not~~ either your reputation or your social connections both with colleagues and beloved mates.

(University students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field.)

I believe that university students should not base their choice of a field of study purely on job availability. While it is tempting to prioritize fields with strong job markets, this approach overlooks the critical role that personal passion and curiosity play in a fulfilling career.

Imagine a world where every student chooses a career based only on market demand. Would we have innovative artists, groundbreaking scientists, or inspiring educators? It is unlikely. Many of the world's most transformative ideas and industries were shaped by people who followed their dreams and passions, not by those seeking for the safest financial path. Take Steve Jobs, for example. He did not pursue computer engineering for the job security it offered; instead, he was driven by a deep interest in design, technology and creativity. The result was Apple - an industry-defining company that revolutionized how we live and work.

Additionally, job markets evolve in unpredictable ways. Fields like data science or cybersecurity are booming now, but the landscape can shift dramatically. The jobs of the future may not even exist yet. By focusing too narrowly on current ~~jobs~~ job trends, students risk choosing careers that could be obsolete or vastly different by the time they enter the workforce.

Passion fuels persistence and excellence. When students pursue fields that genuinely interest them, they are more likely to excel, even if the path is less certain. In a world that values innovation and creativity, following one's interests can lead not only to personal fulfillment but also to breakthroughs that ~~sp~~ shape industries and societies.

In the end, it is better to pursue a field that excites and challenges you, knowing that success is often rooted in a deep connection to one's work, rather than in the security of a paycheck.

I disagree with the claim of "any means". As for me, there must be limited borders for any actions we submit, some rules that have to prevent us from doing something wrong.

I suggest the law as the main argument to my statement. If we recall some of the famous books, like Hugo's "Les misérables", we'll find examples there. Jean Valjean stole the bread to feed his family, ~~and~~ and though it was morally right thing to do, he committed a crime and damaged the shop, which caused his ^{going} ~~going~~ to jail.

The same judicial ^{people} is often raised in the superheroes' stories like "Major Grom" or "Batman". Yes, they do ^{punish} ~~bring~~ villains, but how can they actually subside criminals if they act the same way their enemy does? If there's no exact rule ~~defining~~ dividing evil from good, how can we speak of any "worthy" goals? No one can answer these questions.

On the other hand, the problem's not only about the law and the morals but some puny choices people make in everyday life. There are students, sacrificing their sleep and entertainments to get better marks, parents, overworking and losing touch with their children, and many other people who consider their purpose being meaning enough for anything. But are they indeed? Usually such "great" deeds result in even more problems and despair. →

Therefore, the matter is settled this way: for it's hard to define the limits of "worthy" goals and means, there's no way for this claim to be true to me. I think that everything must be measured and balanced. That is the only correct attitude to any difficulty to overcome.

Deciding what field of study to receive a degree of in a university can be a challenging choice. The majority of people tends to rely on the statistics, showing the availability of jobs where that knowledge is needed. Therefore, it is much safer for a student to enroll on a course that studies the field which has a great demand.

Firstly, students take no risk by getting knowledge in the fields that are popular and renowned within society. After graduating the university they have a great number of options, where they can apply for. For example, my sister has chosen to receive a Bachelor's degree in IT sphere and by the time she graduated she had already been working in two organizations, taking a place of an IT specialist.

Secondly, individuals that have made a decision to get a degree in a popular field of study ~~are~~ greatly save their time. If a ~~person~~ ~~studies~~ is a student of ~~a~~ renowned specialization, there is a high ~~prob~~ probability ~~for~~ ~~him or her~~ that he or she will not get a wanted job, because of the lack of need for such qualification. Therefore such people usually have to receive another degree in the needed field of study that takes another four or five years of studying. For instance, my brother firstly get a Bachelor's degree in philosophy, nevertheless, he could not find a job that needed such qualification, hence he went to the university again in order to become an IT specialist.

In conclusion, I would like to mention that it is crucial for an individual to choose his or her field of study with wisdom.

If the job is not popular ~~now~~ and is not available nowadays, one can meet a ~~lot~~ great a number of challenges within ~~one's~~ the way of getting a ~~job~~ job.

It is undisputable that influence of our parents plays significant role in questions of bringing their children up.¹⁰ Moreover, it is our parents who instill character, habits, features of behaviour and serve as a shining example for their children. As a result, I am inclined to believe that parents should be actively involved in volunteer events at their children's schools.⁶¹

To begin with, one of the most valuable obligations that our parents should follow is to be in their children's lives as much as possible. Not only can they be exemplified as a hardworking and diligent parents, but also they have amazing and invaluable opportunities to see their children growing into people who are on the threshold of building their own lives.¹²³ Consequently, it is of utmost importance to capture such moments until it is late.¹³⁷

Apart from this,¹⁴⁰ volunteer participation, obviously, incorporates interaction with their offsprings' teachers. Indeed this advantage can sufficiently help parents to get to know their children, to learn about their abilities in detail and even sometimes find out how to help them in the times of need. As it usually happens when children step into their adolescent stage, they^{try} to put on a brave face and as if they were fine and nothing bothered them.¹⁴² That is why this is one of the main advantages to be a part of this type of work.¹⁵²

Taking everything into consideration, of course, some parents cannot stand such events and waste their time on such silly things, as they might think. However, such people do not realise what they really miss and how unbelievably painful it will be to have a burden of regret in their hearts in the future.

Even though such statement is very controversial, I can totally agree with it. Such philosophy could be used in any sphere of life and always right in any of those. Many would say that such thought is egoistic, unethical and all in all bad, but I can prove that such philosophy is guided by life itself to move humanity forward.

Let's start from classic Russian literature. There we have such great volume as "Crime and Punishment" by Fedor Dostoevsky. There, main character Rodion Raskolnikov had a theory that states that great people can be forgiven in crime which led to great outcome. Guided by his own thought, Raskolnikov killed old woman, who was lending money under big percent. He wanted to raise money to continue studying and later getting big salary, which could help his family. But he had failed, being caught, and was sent to Siberia for almost a decade. But that led to happy end in which his family got much happier and main character himself became a great person not by the public approval, but by his inner world.

Then we will turn to moral aspect of such thought. Many people claim, that it is unethical to use any measure to achieve worthy goal.

They say that you can't use unfair, offending, bad methods even if it will compensate by result.
But humanity was achieving one height after another using such measures. We used wars, horrid experiments and etc. But let's all consider wars and experiments led to great inventions in many spheres of science. Without horrors of past we wouldn't have conveniences of now.

By the examples, given by me, I want to approve that worthy goal is compensating unethical and horrid means, taken to attain it.

Choosing a field of study appears to be a tough decision for millions of young people. Lots of various factors can influence the final choice. But should the availability ~~in that~~ of jobs in that field be the one that impacts most? I believe, no.

The availability of jobs promise you neither high salary no personal satisfaction and growth. It means only that it wouldn't be really hard to find a job. Of course, for some people that kind of stability and the sense of safety is a priority. This sort of motivation like "I need to earn a living to raise kids" ~~etc~~. However, I believe that it shouldn't be something to base your choice on.

The ~~main~~ factor that I, personally, consider as the most important when choosing a field to study, is personal interest and love for this field. Interest, love, devotion to this sphere, ~~and hard work~~ combined with hard work and studies, will make one high-quality specialist, no matter what is the field. For example, there is a writer whose favorite hobby was cleaning - sounds weird, doesn't it? She knew different techniques and methods, loved the whole process, which lead to her book "Magic Cleaning", which blew out and became a best-seller. This is a bright example, not having the direct connection with university studies, that nevertheless ~~etc~~ illustrate my thought: if a person is truly involved in ~~to~~ their field, aims to develop, love what ~~they're~~ they're doing - they will succeed.

Again - of course, availability of jobs is important to consider. It wouldn't be ~~any~~ rational to choose a field in which is insane hard to find a job. But it would be much better to choose a field where it's somewhat harder to ~~find a job~~ be employed ~~that way~~ but you love it that the one which ~~one~~ is easy to employ but Boring And not Appealing to you. The fact of employment doesn't make you happy and successful, but a working somewhere in the field in which you improve yourself, have interest in and the sense that you made right decision - can.

To conclude, ~~there are~~ A lot of things should be taken into account while making such an important choice, and the availability of the jobs in the field should just be one of them - definitely not the base.

Deciding which college or university to study in is considered one of the most difficult and important decisions to make in a life of a young woman or man, since this decision may have a big impact on their everyday life in the future. Some ~~pe~~ say that we should base our choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field, but I don't wholly agree with it.

Choosing a field to study in based on the number of jobs available could be convenient if you're not sure what you want to do. But if you know what you like, and what you're sure will make you happy you should ~~definitely~~ go for it. Of course, you should definitely take the availability of jobs into account, since if you study for a profession that nobody needs, you'd have a hard time getting by, but it doesn't have to be the main choosing factor.

In my opinion, I think everybody should study something that they have interest in. When you do something that doesn't interest you, or excite you with time you start to despise it. It is proved that working a job that you hate ~~brings~~ takes a toll on your mental health, and you become unhappy and start ^{acquiring new} ~~to acquire~~ bad habits.

All in all, I think the choice of what university or college to study in after school is a difficult decision to make. It has many nuances and additional factors, ~~so that people need to take into account~~, including the availability of jobs. Only by taking them all into account and making the decision carefully we can ensure the stability of our future

Personally, I agree with the claim that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. Usually every person faces a big number of problems on his or her way to a certain goal.

Sometimes these troubles may seem to have no easy solution, so many people prefer giving up and they do not continue trying if the way to their success is too difficult.

In my opinion, such a strategy is completely wrong because any worthy goal is hard to attain. Moreover, it happens that people need to leave something valuable in order to get something better. A worthy goal may require making tough decisions, due to which a person may face some hate or disagreement from society.

Anyway, there are several examples of people taking any means to achieve their goal and becoming successful in history. To give an illustration, a famous Russian Emperor, Peter I, had a great idea of developing his country. He began to introduce lots of European traditions to Russian people. He wasn't taken seriously, that's why he even made several innovative laws that prohibited simple things. For example, people had to pay a special tax to wear a beard. Many Russians didn't like his ideas and disagreed with many of them, they dislike their Emperor and his decisions. However, these measures were useful and Russia started to develop quickly.

This historical example shows that sometimes sociable misunderstanding, disagreement and disrespect shouldn't stop a person on his or her way to success. That is why I completely agree that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable.

It is said that many important discoveries or creations are accidental: it is usually while seeking the answer to one question that we come across the answer to another. I'm highly agree with this statement. To prove my point of view I would like to give two reasons.

Firstly, I would like to mention that there was a period in my life when I craved the ability to draw well and rate my works as good. However, most of the time I was experiencing social anxiety and it was bothering me a lot. I think it was one of the main reasons which wasn't letting me reach that exact art level. When I started ^{changing and} socialising I could feel my attitude to drawing changing as well because I realised that my works should express my own feelings instead of making an exact copy of reality. Only once I started seeking the answers to my mental insecurities, I came across a solution for another problem of mine.

Secondly, I noticed that the more people get involved in their problem, the more they tend to forget about other things, surrounding them. They start seeking for the answers to only one aspect of their life, ignoring everything else. Sometimes, a situation needs to be seen from different angles so the correct decision could be made. So that's why people can find the answer to something else while they're busy solving another problem. ⁺They see another point of view.

To sum up, I would like to say that sometimes it is important to change your life focus so the solution could be found itself.

Over recent years, more and more university students have been facing the problem of choosing a field of study. Some tend to focus on the availability of jobs in a certain field. In my opinion, such intention is ~~not right~~ ^{compelling} wrong.

Choosing the field of study which currently has a high job availability may give one a sense of stability and clarity of their future. By aiming for such a path, however, students sacrifice their own interests, ~~thereby~~ ^{making} money their main source of motivation. Researches show that such motivation is impermanent compared to the one ~~now~~ ^{now} nourished by one's passion. Those who have chosen their study field according to a high number of jobs available are likely to become mentally drained as their speciality ~~does not~~ ^{not} bring them ~~full~~ fulfillment. This ~~creates~~ ^{leads} to ~~an~~ ^{the} issue of the unproductive workforce, which ~~is~~ affects not only the economy, but also ^{the} society as a whole. Despite having such global consequences, the choice that is not focused on one's personal intention can be debated from another angle. In the rapidly developing world, sticking to the current market state ~~is~~ does not guarantee ~~a~~ students ^{getting} a job. The economy is not stagnant, ~~so~~ ^{therefore} ~~the~~ ^{things} can change ~~immensely~~ ^{immensely} even in a few months from now.

To conclude, ^{although} basing one's choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs ~~in that~~ ^{field} ~~may give~~ has a benefit of making student's future seem clear, ~~but~~ it is outweighed by the major drawbacks: rapidly changing market and the possibility to become unproductive due to the absence of fulfillment.

Choosing a field of study in university is very important, because it directly affects one's future career. Students spend many years studying one major and this time shouldn't be wasted on something nonprofitable. Studying anything that can't offer you job is time-consuming and meaningless and I am going to explain you why.

To start with, every student enters university with one goal - to have a high-paid job that he/she likes. Having a job means having an opportunity to pay the bills and buy everything one needs to live comfortably. If a student spends years studying a field that has a low availability of jobs, he/she eventually will end up poor and unsatisfied as he/she ~~was~~ will not have any money.

Furthermore, choosing a field of study with a big availability of jobs guarantees a stability and a space for developing in a long term. For example, IT technologies and computer science are very popular majors, and because of their popularity they develop rapidly. It means that in the future all jobs that are connected with IT will still be in use and everyone who studied it will have a job.

To sum up, choosing a field of study based on the availability of jobs is the same as choosing stable and comfortable future. All students who want to be sure in next day and have a big income should base their choice on number of jobs that this field of study can provide them.

These days lots of people around the world choose to base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. It is really important and it is necessary to be lead by your own preferences and wishes. For this reason, before you start your study, you should carefully consider your strongest and weakest points and make your decision as fast as possible in order to choose the job you really love.

To begin with, I think that your choice of job should not base on its availability. If you do not like the place you are working at, you may have a depression or other diseases. Due to this fact, your work will be ~~the~~ the part of your life that you really hate.

In addition, it is your obligation to your children to choose the work for them. In case you don't like your job, you won't be able to help them. Furthermore, they may also feel disgust to their job in future.

To sum up, I think that it is a really tough choice, so you should make it wisely and for a piece of advice from your relatives and friends. As for me, I fully disagree with an argument that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field.

I fully agree with the statement 'University students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field'. This claim means that every student should think about his future career before choosing the field at university. First of all, he should plan his life and further education to concentrate on the field that he will need in the future. But the problem is that not all university students think how they will use their knowledge and gained experience for their jobs in several years.

Personally, I am convinced that all students ought to base their choice of education on the amount of available professions in the field. Firstly, it gives an opportunity to be sure about the future life of an adult. The student will feel confident if he knows more information about his job. It can also help to prepare for the career properly. Secondly, when students know about the professions in which they can succeed, they have a chance to work part-time during the years of education at university to get extra experience. Finally, young people can meet professional people who work in the field they are interested in. It will help university students to get useful advice and learn more about all pros and cons of the work.

To conclude it up, I would like to say that students must think twice before choosing the field to learn. This choice depends on plenty of factors but we should remember about our own dreams and goals. And our job is one of the steps to reach them.

~~People~~ People say that "Many important discoveries or creations are ~~at~~ accidental: It is usually while seeking a the answer to one question that we come across the answer to another", I totally agree, there are a lot of important discoveries that were made by pure coincidence.

A very popular example is how the whole continent of the Americas was accidentally found by Christopher Columbus, while he was looking for a trade route to India.

Well, of course not everything is discovered or created only by chance

In today's world, more and more schools around the globe tend to involve ^{all} parents in educational process by helping teachers and volunteering. I personally agree with this policy and I'm going to tell you some reasons why.

~~In my personal opinion, school plays a crucial part~~ role in children's life. I suggest that all parents, with no exceptions, should be involved in school life of their kids because parents have a ~~very~~ significant ~~are~~ the most reliable people in their life, so kids will ^{firstly} follow their parent's ~~no~~ rules, not teacher's.

In my personal opinion, school plays crucial role in children's life. It is a place, where you meet your first friends, where you learn how to read and write and of course cooperate with your peers. But schools should ~~involve~~ engage parents in participating in the whole the studying process by volunteering. For example, in the morning, they may volunteer near the roads, at the pedestrian crossings. Little kids always carry enormous ~~big~~ backpacks with them, so they often simply can't see a car or a bus. ~~That~~ This often leads to ~~the~~ accidents. Parents can help kids to cross the road and regulate the traffic near school.

Another way ~~to help~~ is to provide help to teachers and administration in looking after ~~properly~~ pupils ^{inside}. Not only boys, but girls too are running in the corridors at school. It can happen neither because they are playing with each other nor because they don't want to be late to the lesson. In this case, parent may help ~~educators~~ to them to find the right classroom or navigate around their school.

~~To summarize~~ In conclusion, I would like to say that I find the idea of requiring all parents to volunteer to their children's schools as ~~very~~ ^a suitable and really effective solution to some challenges, that ~~may~~ ^{often} occur during the studying process.

Different ways of achieving success have always generated heated discussions. According to the given quote, 'in a serious situation any means can be taken, no matter how good or bad they are. This writing will present my opinion on this vexed question.

To begin with, I would like to ~~mention~~ underscore that I do not really agree with the statement. No goal can be more important than people around us, so we should always remember about moral and never become imposters on ~~our~~ our way to achieving something. For instance, I would like to remind you a story about ancient Russian tsars. Sviatopolk, who was a ruler in a small town, decide to become a leader of the whole country.¹⁸ To do so, he killed his younger brothers Boris and Gleb, who are currently known as Saint Boris and Gleb. However, this murder did not lead Sviatopolk to success and resulted in a huge civil war in Russia. Sviatopolk's older brother Yaroslav punished the murderer, so he lost everything he had, including his own lands. Sviatopolk had to escape to Poland, trying to save his life, and ~~still~~ soon passed away there, forgotten and hated in his Motherland.⁸⁰ This example shows us, that evil people can never end up being rewarded, they are always punished for their deals. On the other hand, those ones, who remember about justice, have big chances to get a valuable position in life.

Secondly, I would like to mention, that ~~not~~ ~~never~~ people without moral are never loved by others. Children in all countries are taught, that helping others and being ready to sacrifice your ideas for the sake of nearest and dearest ~~a~~ is more important than achieving great fame and ~~soon~~ success. That is why we should always choose only accessible methods for reaching our goals.

In conclusion, I'd like to say that I completely disagree with the given statement. Historical examples and life experiences ~~teach~~ us to be kindhearted and not ruin lives of others for the sake of our goals.

"If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable." I do agree with these words. People can do everything to reach their aims, especially, when it is worthy.

Firstly, I can tell about sportmen. They ~~are~~ If they are professional sportmen, then they always do their best to achieve a goal. Their main object is an Olympiad. For instance, Kamila Valieva, Russian figure skater, has been working out every day ~~during~~ during the year before the Olympiad. She did everything to take a gold medal. She became a gold Russian Champion, but bronze world Champion. Despite it, every Russian man is proud of her.

Secondly, I would tell about myself. Looking back, I am really proud of myself not to give up. When I was a child, I liked to eat a lot of sweets. As a result, I ~~was~~ ^{gained weight} ~~became~~ ~~fat~~. In my teenager's years, from 13 to 14, peers bullied me on my weight. ~~So~~ And I decided to take ~~it~~ everything in my hands. I started going to the gym and keeping healthy nutrition. I ~~ach-~~ achieved my goal. I ~~was~~ ~~bec~~ became skinny. And now, when I achieved my goal, I understand that my goal and means to attain it are worthy. ~~It~~ Today, I have ~~a~~ some healthy habits, which helped me earlier.

In conclusion, I think that every means taken to attain a goal are worthy, when the goal is worthy. Sometimes it is not easy to start, but it is important to do a little step to the dream. I have ~~no~~ no doubt about it, because I personally was in such situation!

The world of jobs is quite enormous nowadays, consequently, modern students have a large range of options. But one of the most compelling factors while choosing a field of study that students should account, is the availability of jobs in that field.

There is no doubt that you are much more productive if your job appeals to you, but what if this kind of job is not highly required on a job market or young people have to spend ages to find ~~this~~ it? ~~kind of job?~~ ~~Many people~~ It seems to me that students should wisely choose a field of study, which is based not only on their preferences. Firstly, adolescents can make a little research, where they ^{may} ~~will~~ analyse ~~the~~ some statistics, look through some data or tables which ~~reflect~~ shows the most popular or the most required jobs today. And after that compare their desires to the available jobs. This strategy can help students to avoid unemployment right after graduation.

In case you ~~are~~ are fond of very specific disciplines, try to integrate your dream ~~work~~ job and some pop of the popular. For instance, you are keen on law, justice ~~and~~ etc, and your ~~worst~~ ~~dream~~ ~~is~~ ~~to~~ ~~be~~ ~~a~~ ~~lawyer~~ ~~is~~ ~~to~~ ~~be~~ ~~a~~ ~~lawyer~~ wildest dream is to be a lawyer or an advocate. Then ~~the~~ try to study informatics ~~and~~ so that you can work as a ~~law~~ cyber-lawyer or a specialist in a field of ~~and~~ crimes that ~~occur~~ are committed^{ed} on the Internet! This kind of law is rapidly raising ~~its~~ in popularity, because the twenty first century is ~~as~~ ~~beginning~~ beginning of a new ~~the~~ era of high technologies.

Overall, university students should be at least approximately sure that they will ~~find~~ have some jobs available for them after graduation when choosing a field of study. This ~~is~~ well-thought decision will provide stable future for young people.

One cannot deny that choosing a career is an important part of a ~~youngster's~~ ^{youngster's} life. They need to make a decision according to their own purposes and plans. One of the ~~main~~ ^{main} criteria of choosing a future profession is the availability of jobs in that field and now I am going to prove it.

First of all, our world is developing very fast. There are a lot of jobs nowadays that will be "dead" in the near future since ~~modern~~ ^{modern} technologies and artificial intelligence replace workers. For example, we can notice a ~~robot~~ ^{special} device in some shops that can service customers as well as shop assistant. Consequently, this job will not be common in the future. ~~And~~ and there is no sense to build a career in this walk of life. Besides, some jobs exist only in the particular place or country. If one wants to get a degree in ocean engineering, they definitely cannot work in Armenia as there are no oceans. ~~in the future~~ Furthermore, there can be a problem with employment after finishing universities. Sometimes a lot of people get ~~the~~ ^{particular} profession ~~in~~ ~~one field~~, so however there can be no available jobs in this field. In this case, individuals might get another degree or to move to other cities or countries.

On balance, students need to plan not only studying in the university but also their future. In the modern world it is difficult to take into account all criteria but fortunately, there is a big variety of jobs so everyone can find a convenience one.

Nowadays, education has become one of the most important things in life for almost every child. Teachers are required to take all the responsibility for their students' attendance and grades. However, is this a right thing to do, considering the fact that most of the parents pay no attention to their children's schools?

Obviously, parental concern about students' success in school is a major factor for their motivation and aspirations. Controlling children's marks and absences is crucial for developing self-control and passion for hard work. It might not seem like it, but according to the statistics, it is known that if those steps are not ~~made~~^{taken}, a student is likely to show less interest in their studies.

The other key reason of the necessity for all parents to be required to volunteer time to their children's schools is more about personal interactions between family members rather than discipline.

Spending time ^{doing assignments} together with your child will not only positively affect their skills and memory, but also provide a certain amount of quality time spent with your loved one. ~~It is best to~~

Moreover, keeping in touch with teachers also ~~also~~ fosters children's development. Since most of ~~the~~ social interactions at school are made in classrooms, therefore in front of a teacher, they are most likely to notice any cases of bullying or prohibited ~~activity~~ activities. Speaking to teachers ~~prevent~~ ~~destructive~~ helps to establish and prevent destructive behaviour.

To conclude, I strongly believe that all parents should be required to volunteer time to their children's schools, thus I agree with the given statement. School years are the ones that define a personality, so parents ~~must~~ have to make all the efforts to shape a diligent and responsible character of their son or daughters.

It's a relevant question for every University student should they base the field they're ~~interested~~ interested in on the quantity of ~~occupations~~ jobs in it. From my point of view, this statement is hardly not to be agreed with. By the way, it depends on some numerous factors. I'd like to lit the light to.

The most fundamental aspect how to choose the field of study taking into account its jobs is its relevance. This factor should be considered when watching through ^{mainly} humanitarian occupations, as a large number of them are about to vanish from the labour market. Such jobs as a librarian or a poet don't require a lot of specialists, because their necessity ~~isn't~~ isn't essential as it was ^{half of the} century ago. ^{Firstly} there're plenty of e-books ^{to read} instead of the person's going to the library. Moreover, nowadays people are tend to buy ~~the~~ literature than to borrow it in special places. Secondly, as for the poetry, almost every Artificial Intelligence is able to write any poem the one would like without the help of the specialist. ~~And~~ And it's a common knowledge that the poetry of ~~the~~ 21-st century has ~~repressed~~ regressed. That's the reason there's no need to ~~study~~ study the field with a low relevance.

On the contrary, ~~let's~~ let's look through such popular fields with lots of specialities or as IT-sphere. It consists of such jobs as SMM, programmer, and a lot of management occupations. That mean a lot of opportunities for a student, including career raise and study courses. Moreover, ~~this~~ this field would be vital for our world for a long time.

To sum up, to base on the availability of the job when choosing the field of interest is a key factor which can influence the future of an University Student.

I agree that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. Future workers need to know what they will be able to do in their future. It is the reason why they have to choose a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. Also, if they have a dream from their childhood to be a surgeon, who ~~helps~~ helps people, they should choose this type of medical education. If student wants to be a dentist, he or she needs to go in different faculty. Of course, in the beginning of education there are similar knowledges for everyone: they learn ~~the~~ basics of medicine, but later they have to learn different, original things only for their job. Students need to know about jobs, that they can work after graduating of university, because there can be a problem with this job: maybe someone will not like it. It is also a reason to choose a field of study in university. ~~A~~ Different problem is salary. Student can really like his^{or her} job, but it can have very low salary. ~~In~~ In this situation he or she needs to choose ~~the best~~ the best options for themselves: good mental health and favourite job, or good salary. If student choose salary, he or she needs to ~~study~~ study in another

~~The field~~ field of study. Personally, I think ~~that students~~ that students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. In my future I would like to have a good job with a high salary, ~~that's~~ that's why I would choose a field of study before starting my education.

Creative writing - Topic No 1~~The choice~~^{option} of a fi

The choice of a field of study is essential period moment for ~~many~~ numerous students since it ~~determine~~ the further years^{profession} of university will be related to the field. However, is it ~~advisable~~ recommended for students to take the availability of jobs in a certain field into consideration? I believe that it is ~~ess~~ crucial in order to avoid negative consequences.

The first reason is that the student's wishes and desires ~~could~~ might not match the reality of actual world. There is possibility that ~~in this~~ ~~in~~ profession the need of of chosen profession will have no need in a couple of years after graduation. Therefore, the student will not apply for a job and likely to become unemployed. For instance, my To prevent this situation, ~~therefore~~ it is recommended to consider not only personal wishes but the availability of jobs on labour market.

Another Moreover, ~~it~~ the certain job might ~~be~~ the ~~numbers~~^{amount} of workers might ~~cover~~ the needed amount in certain field on ~~many~~ labour market. It can lead to either strong competition or ~~the lack~~ ~~too~~ of working places since every place is ~~taken~~ already taken by someone else. ~~In addition~~ it is ~~very~~ For instance, I considered judge as a suitable option for me due to my interest in law ~~and~~ However, I analyzed the number^{workers} of ~~law~~ ~~students~~ in this field and realised that it is going to be nearly possible to find a working place which suits both ~~the~~ interests and the desired wage. "If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable".

Many people wonder whether ~~if~~ a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. I am absolutely convinced that it is a good idea for those who try to reach their main aim. This essay will explain why, using specific reasons.

First and foremost, it is important to highlight that the more an individual tries and makes mistakes, the more there is to be a chance to win. Thus, when a person have taken numerous means, they are highly likely to reach their goal due to their gained experience.

Moreover, it is important to consider that any means taken to attain a main aim are worth it not only for an experience, but also for enhancing a self-esteem of a person who tries to reach their goal. Having taken a lot of attempts, a person is likely to feel that they have worked hard, indeed, and under no circumstances will they fail. Thus, such a great motivation might well be useful in this challenging, but engaging path.

However, trying any means to reach a goal may lead to some downsides. One of the flaws is that a taken mean might distrust other people and might seem egoistic. That said, it is crucial to think about consequences ^{before} making a dream come true.

In the light of the above, it is clear that taking any means to attain a good goal offers numerous benefits, such as experience and high self-esteem. Overall, further studies could shed light on the long-term effects of this approach.

Writing ~~the~~ a response to the claim, I absolutely agree with it. Not only is it important for students to base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field, but also to choose a job according to skills that they can offer.

Many people ~~struggle~~ after finishing ~~universities~~ universities tend to have difficulties when finding a job either because their major is worthless or ~~they are not satisfied~~ they are not satisfied with the salary that employers offer. Therefore, it is advisable for future university students to choose their major wisely, analysing the job market before enrolling.

Furthermore, even for me it was challenging to find a balance between something I like and something that is needed. It requires efforts and clear-mindedness to choose a field of study that fits you and at the ~~same~~ same time fits the market.

The situation gets worse when universities are offering inherently pointless majors such as "Studies of modern feminism", "Non-binary specialist" etc. It may sound a bit harsh to call them "pointless", however, rarely do ^{anyone} needs any products or services from them, so that ~~definition~~ definition seems reasonable. Luckily, there are no such majors in Russia, so our students will not get distracted by them.

Sometimes it is a problem for parents to pay the tuition fee, so students either choose worse university or worthless major that will not be valuable after they graduate. The solution is pay monthly or, if the price is too high, take a loan. Moreover, everyone can apply for a ~~scholarship~~ scholarship and take their chances of getting free education. There is always an opportunity, it is up for you whether to use it or not.

~~It is often argued that many important discoveries or creations are accidental and done while seeking the answer to one question~~

It is often argued that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. Some people agree with this undoubtedly ^{thought-provoking} ~~controversial~~ statement, but I definitely have the opposite view.

At first, it may really seem that if a goal is ~~highly~~ ^{very} useful and even vital not only for one person, but for the whole mankind, any methods must be taken in order to complete it. ~~But~~ However, For instance, we will all agree on the importance of a progress in medicine. However, sometimes the willingness to ~~new~~ ^{make} high-technology ~~the~~ new discoveries and technologies may ~~result in~~ lead to terrifying consequences like atrocities. The brightest and the most harmful and terrible example of taking any means to attain an impressive ^{worthy} goal is a case of experiments on humans that were ^{being} taken during the World War II*. One can disagree with me, telling that I am too radical. But if we agree that any ~~mean~~ methods are relevant when realising a significant goal, we also admit that even murder, tortures, and other terrible things can be used which is totally unacceptable. The Mankind's moral values could not be betrayed.

It is also worth mentioning that this problem was ~~also~~ actually ^{revealed} ~~discussed~~ even in some books. For instance, "The crime and punishment" by Fyodor Dostoevsky is ~~definitely~~ ~~a makes a~~ reader to think over the

The main character, Raskolnikov, takes evil means in order to answer himself an important moral question. The reader is able to themselves decide if they agree with the character or not.

In conclusion, it is true to say that not only means and methods are relevant and accepted if a goal is worthy. ~~We should not use~~ In no way are atrocities ^{justified} ~~acceptable~~ even if a goal is vital and ~~saving~~ victims are indispensable.

* Despite the fact that ~~these~~ those ~~ter~~ harmful experiments resulted in progress in medicine and helped to rescue a lot of people

Do you have children? If you do, have you ever been told to donate money for "the curtains" or to pay a visit to school and help with cleaning your child's class up? If it's all new to you, you surely are a lucky one.

There are some people saying, that it's crucial to spend a decent amount of time in your child's school. That it will help you to "form a connection" between you and your kid. But why can't you do that at home or in a park? It would be ten times more helpful than spending time in a stuffy classroom. And kids already spend too much time at school. Other people say, that schools are already free, so parents shouldn't take that for granted and at least occasionally spend time there. But actually, schools aren't free. They receive funds from the national budget, which we all form by paying taxes. That's why parents don't owe schools anything.

What's more, most adults, at least responsible ones, have work to do. Their schedule can be rearranged in some cases, but in general they must be in the office from 8 am to 5 pm sharp, 5 days a week.

and during their days-off, they're completely exhausted.

It's literally cruel to make them go to school for some event.

If you're still not sure ~~about~~ then think about the atmosphere if they come. They all will be frustrated and irritated and school will gain nothing but arguments.

→ To conclude, force will only bring back aggression. All interactions between parents and school ^{as per} ~~should~~ ^{in my opinion} be voluntary if they're not related to the hearing process.

Today most students tend to choose their field of study in accordance with the availability of jobs in that particular field. Personally, I suppose that these students are misled. ~~for some reasons~~. Firstly, ~~it is~~ there is ^{some} mere chances of anticipating the future job's market situation, due to the constant changes in the modern world. For example, 5 years ago nobody presumed that delivery service would be so relevant and lucrative realm^{in Russia}, offering an abundance of jobs as it does nowadays. It is obvious that there will be more ~~some~~ palpable changes in the future, therefore students don't need to be focused on current situation. Secondly, it is crucial for people to study what they actually like. Otherwise the whole studying process ~~and~~ ~~set~~ curriculum ~~will~~ turns out to be a nightmare, ~~while~~ All assignments will be embraced as a tedious ~~and~~ tasks, with no entertainment. This situation is perilous for students' mental health, ~~and~~ ~~decreasing~~ ^{and} ~~their motivation to study~~ and kills their incentive to study. In some ^{rare} cases it leads to suicide. [I totally disagree with this position for some reasons and] Thirdly, it is wrong to assume that there is a lack of jobs available in some fields. In my opinion I'm convinced that a person with an array of relevant skills ~~and~~ required in the field and good personal traits will "come in handy" in every company, regardless of the field. Those, who were diligent and disciplined during their studies, will always find a job in any field they want. In conclusion, I believe that students ~~don't~~ ~~need~~ shouldn't solely focus on the availability of jobs in the field. It is better for them to while choosing their programs define what they really like and then pursue it in university.

It goes without saying that nowadays a lot of people believe that if goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. Although, others think that this statement is opposite to moral principles. In my essay I will analyze this topic.

To tell the truth, I think that the statement "if goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable" is very immoral. In my opinion, not every aim worth doing some immoral things. For example, ~~if~~ we can say: "If I really want to attend the KSE of Financial Academy, I may cheat on the exam or on the olympiad because this worth it. Although, I strongly believe that it is unfair to others because many students spend all of their leisure time on preparation for entering university.

Another one argument for supporting my position is that if a person really think that all means justify his goals, it can lead to irreparable consequences for him. For example, a person decide to cheat on the National State Exam and use mobile phone. ~~he will be known~~ If a person being caught by examiners with using phone, he or she will be banned, ~~deleted~~ from exam and has no more chance to pass the exam this year. Moreover, in this case the person ^{can not} ~~can't~~ enter the university he dreams of. As a result, not all means justify aims.

In conclusion, in consideration of the above the stated facts, I strongly believe that the statement "if goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable" is immoral and this position can cause serious problems.

Choosing your future profession

Undoubtedly, ~~modern world~~ the speed of development of ~~modern~~ modern world is increasing every day. New technologies are created on regular basis. As a result, we have a great ~~amou~~ number of various professions these days. Can you imagine how hard it can be for adolescents to choose their future ~~profession~~ job in this endless number of opportunities? Some people say that students ought to base their chose of a field of university study on the availability of jobs in that field. Actually, I disagree with this ~~statem~~ point of view. I suppose that students should choose their future profession basing on their personal interests. To support my opinion, I am going to provide a list of arguments.

~~First of all, as a famous Russian proverb says,~~
~~"all prof~~

~~First of all, as a famous Russian childish poem says,~~
~~"all professions are necessary, all professions are essential".~~
Modern world has no ~~pr work~~ which is useless for our society. Every ~~field of~~ profession is significant, no matter if it is a school teacher

First of all, good specialists are always required for our ~~see~~ society. Even if you think that there are too many specialists in concrete profession, not all of these specialists are brilliant. If you are a hard-working ~~determined~~ ^{determinant} person, you will achieve success in your business, no matter how many people ~~are already~~ have same profession.

Secondly, it is very tough to study and work in a field of business which you don't like. It is almost impossible to make our brain work in the field which is not fascinating for you. If you ~~go to the university major~~ start learning the field ~~to start making yourself studying~~ start making yourself learn the material which ~~is~~ is not engaging for your brain, you will face mental problems or even have a long-termed depression.

To sum up, as a famous Russian ~~po~~ childish poem says, "all professions are necessary, all professions are essential". And excellent specialists in ~~these~~ ~~p~~ all professions are also necessary and essential. When choosing a future field of study, listen to your heart, and you will become the happiest person in the world.

It is a debatable & topic to whether many many important discoveries are accidental or not. In this article, I would like to take the supportive side of this argument.

Firstly, I believe it is necessary to state my my opinion about the origin of this idea. It can be ~~be~~ seen in quotes from famous people, known ~~known~~ worldwide, and probably everyone has heard it from others ~~for~~ before. The reasonings behind that are not hiding any conspiracy, they are proven by facts and real cases. In our fast-developing world, the number of different professions has risen. There are various spheres of society, which consist of many fields of jobs. In these fields specialities are connected. In my opinion, I believe that university students should definitely base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field.

University students have many opportunities in career choice. For this reason, the best way for them to get a well-paid job is to think deeply about their future and choose an available and prestigious field of study.

The job market has very strict requirements for young people nowadays. Besides, many specialities in various fields are not as needed now as they were in the past. Professions are instantly escaping from the job market because of the process of automatization. For example, accountants and bank clerks are not needed anymore as now computers are performing their functions. That is why students should choose professions in new developing spheres.

Every field of study has its availability. As I know, it is hard to get a profession in the political or ~~cultural~~ cultural fields. ~~It is because~~ That is because jobs connected to these spheres have many candidates wanting to apply for them.

University students should also find a field of study that is suitable for their talent and personality. No one can force students to choose a specific study plan or a programme.

In my opinion, if a university student did not choose a great study field for him, he would have had some problems in finding a job that is suitable for him. Students can check the availability of ~~the~~ a field of study by watching and reading the news. It often has articles about ~~a~~ the education.

Topic: If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable.

Everybody has dreams. Those of us who are determined and ambitious can ^{transform} ~~make~~ their dreams into goals. These aims are really worthy for us, because every evening we cherish our thoughts about them, so if people get any opportunity, they should take it and do their best. In my opinion, if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable.

First of all, I firmly believe that all of us should follow their dreams, because it can increase our level of happiness. If our dreams become true, we feel like the odds will be ever in our favour. It may increase our motivation for work and study. Moreover, achieving a goal can become a life-changing event, that can improve ^{our} ~~your~~ life conditions, boost ~~your~~ knowledge and give new opportunities. Last, but not least, a person may regret for the rest of his life about not achieving ~~a~~ ^v worthy goal.

However, there may be people who have different view on this topic. For example, somebody may think that while doing all for your goal you should not be self-focused and think about their pleasure too. But, I find it completely wrong. All things have their costs, so people should be ready to sacrifice something to achieve their aims.

To conclude, I think that people should be ready to work hard and take all opportunities if they want to achieve their goals and become happy. I am really ambitious person, so maybe because of that I have this point of view.

The choice-of-faculty problem is becoming more and more discussible nowadays. Undoubtedly, this choice defines the whole entire upcoming life of school graduates. We must admit that there are many reasons and factors that may influence one's choice. Here another problem arises: which factor is the main one? The quote of the topic stands for the availability of jobs in the field of study but does this approach work for everybody? Let me question this statement.

Not every single person of 8 billion people who live on our planet seek for financial success and stability. Some people row their lives to the altar of the beautiful: music, art, architecture etc. These people prioritise spiritual and moral values over money. Of course, they may find some sponsorship and respect but these criteria are therser the goal for them. So why & would such people go far, for instance, the faculty of law or economics?

Let us be honest, not every professional field is empowered to guarantee prosperity. Moreover, the fact of having accomplished some university doesn't guarantee former students a job as well. If one is not enthusiastic about the field they have already picked up, they will not even try to indulge in it ~~and~~ to understand it profoundly. This problem is often faced by the students who choosed the field of study basing on their parents' advice. But parents are not the ones to make this choice. Taking into consideration that they want all the best for their child, parents may not know what their kid really wants better then the kid.

Summing that up, none of us shares the same experience with others. That is why students should base their choice of a field of study not on the availability of jobs in that field but on what they ~~are~~ like. A-501

There is a claim that all parents should be required to volunteer time to their children's schools. I find this claim completely wrong. No volunteer time should be obligatory, that is the point of volunteer work.

To begin with, this statement ruins the entire idea of volunteering. When it becomes a responsibility and stops being an opportunity to help, it starts being just extra work and pressure for adults, who only give their children necessary education. I do not imply that schools are forbidden to offer volunteer time. Some help from students' parents ~~is~~ has to be appreciated, but it should be a matter of choice.

What's more, parents are usually busy all the time. Some people who don't have a job, have more free time, of course, but it is a rare case. Most adults work a lot to afford a comfortable life for themselves and their family in such an expensive world. That means, they have no time to help the school since they are only free at weekends which they spend on chores and taking care of the house. This makes requiring parents to volunteer pointless due to lack of free time.

The last, but not least point is that any volunteer work requires special personality traits which are not obtained by one hundred percent of people. These traits are kindness, the will to help, devotion, et cetera. It is ridiculous to expect that all students' parents will enthusiastically spend their time helping a school instead of their own business.

To sum up, I consider volunteer time a choice, not a ~~responsibility~~ responsibility. Adults should have an opportunity both to offer their help and to refuse volunteering regardless of the reason.

It is a debatable issue if everything ^{a person} ~~people~~ does for reaching a goal is essential and can be justified. Some people think that succession is the most important aspect, while others disagree with them. Personally, I agree with the claim.

Firstly, often the decisions, which were made for achieving the aim, are beneficial not for one person only, but for the whole society. In other words, people might be thankful for the result, no matter what means one chose. There is a great example of that in Russian history. During the war between Russia and France, Napoleon was chasing a dream to capture Moscow. The Russian army made a decision to burn down the whole city. When Napoleon and his army found out about that, ~~they~~ it no longer made sense to fight for the city for them. This way, Russian warriors managed to make the enemies leave and they still remained heroes in Russians' eyes. Even though the city was burned, Napoleon didn't capture its citizens, which people were grateful for.

Secondly, sometimes people manage to avoid punishment for what it took to succeed. In other words, society might be so impressed by the result, that they don't pay any attention to the means of achieving it. For instance, in a book "Harry Potter and the Philosopher Stone" the main character and his friends ~~managed to~~ went against most of the school rules to know the ~~the~~ truth about the stone. However, they were not punished or expelled. The school principle, Dumbledore, was grateful for the big role the kids played in finding the Stone. ~~man~~

In conclusion, I think that if a person ~~is~~ truly wants to ~~xxxxx~~ succeed and to make their dreams come true, they should fight for it no matter what, whatever it takes.

It is believed that we come across the answer to some questions while seeking the answer to absolutely different one and from my perspective this belief is proved and more truthful than any other one.

There are plenty of examples of famous scientists exploring one particular matter and trying to find an answer to a specific question but in the end coming up with resolutions for various problems or even stumbling across something new that was not known by any human before at all.

There is a simple logic behind this phenomenon - ~~trying to find~~ seeking for something that is beyond your knowledge and doesn't fit in your current understanding of how ~~does the universe work~~ the universe works is like wandering in the dark - you have no idea what you are looking for, so you might accidentally mistake one thing for another or even find something you didn't expect to find. Even in our everyday life we can easily notice this tendency - for instance while collecting information for school project, reading literature or trying to find what you should prepare for dinner - you dive into endless streams of information on the daily basis, especially now - ^{during} ~~for~~ the time of unstoppable technological progress and in the world where people with the ~~largest~~ biggest amount of knowledge ~~are~~ are being on top. Obviously, ^{not} everything you come across while researching is truly important, but something that has no value for you might be really useful for others.

Knowledge is power, so it is ~~extremely~~ ^{crucially} needed to be aware of situation around you and be prepared to ~~it~~ recall ~~you~~ something you know. ~~It might be us~~

Every year thousands of young people enter the universities. Some people state that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. But is it wise?

Personally, I do not support this statement. People are all different with different preferences and the amount of field with many available jobs (especially with high salary) is shallow. So many people risk their feel of satisfaction from their work to make more money. It can lead to many bad consequences like lack of productivity on the workplace or even the occurring mental health problems of a worker. Also, our world is constantly changing. So it is always hard to foresee what fields will be more beneficial in the future. Plus, with the development of the AI, nowadays it is much harder to say anything about our accustomed specialities. Many jobs do not seem so useful now because of the technological achievements. And who knows what jobs are going to be next. So there is simply no point in choosing a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field.

It is always a pressure for young people to choose a field of study. Especially nowadays, when we can't be sure about tomorrow. Unfortunately, there are a lot of cases when people make a wrong choice, also because of the hunt for the money. This is the reason why I can't agree with the statement. It is always better to listen to your heart and do things that you enjoy doing. With true passion you will conquer every problem on your way.

It is hardly argued that choosing a future career is a difficult decision for almost all young people. Entering a university, it can be quite challenging to select a field of study that would fully suit one's interests. Moreover, there is another important factor to think of: the availability of jobs in that field. This leads to a question: should university students base their choice of a field of study on this?

Choosing a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field has many advantages. First of all, it provides great opportunities of finding a good job. This can be explained by the fact that, if one's degree covers a wide sphere of knowledge, they are capable of doing many various tasks. Secondly, this degree can greatly accelerate one's career path since it gives them more experience and they do not need to get it while working. Finally, basing one's choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field offers flexibility in changing jobs. If one loses interest in their current job, they will not need extra education for a new one.

Unfortunately, some problems can arise with choosing a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. One for instance, if one makes their choice only by that factor, they could easily lose interest in ~~their~~ the sphere they have chosen. This can lead to the lack of motivation to work.

To sum up, I strongly believe that university students should base their choice of ~~the~~ a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. Thus, they make their future career path much less complicated.

We are given a statement which ~~refers~~ depicts the importance and difficulty of achieving goals in our lives. It says: „If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable.“ I agree with this statement, ~~as~~ ~~moving~~, as moving towards a pre-set goal shows one's true personality and the ability to overcome pressure. In this essay I am ~~now~~ going to analyse this statement and give my personal opinion on this topic. ^{88 words} ₅₄

To begin with, the greatest example for me is my grandmother, who throughout her life, did her very best to help her family. Her main goal was to provide bright future for her son and daughter. She used to get up really early, then go to a challenging jobs, earning a really small amount of money just to bring food for her children. This is an extremely vital example of a true personality, who almost sacrificed herself to help her family. One can barely understand, how a person can overcome such obstacles, but for me, this is such a worthy goal and all the sufferings can be easily justified. ^{104 words}

Another great example is the story of a talented entrepreneur, Elon Musk, SpaceX's co-founder and CEO. In his childhood he was a bright student who always dreamt of exploring space. Having researched ~~every~~ ^{up} everything about this topic, Elon did his best and managed to start a company, which ~~now~~ ^{through years} has ~~an~~ had an unbelievable impact on the way people explore space.

What's more, despite the fact, that he is a multimillionaire, this man doesn't relax at all. Elon Musk sleeps about 6 hours a day and the rest of his time he works and all of this just to achieve his ~~huge~~ ^{big} goal, ~~that is~~ ^{that is} ~~huge~~ ^{big} important for the society. And who knows, wasn't there a person like Elon, will the society be able to learn about space without his innovative ideas? 140 words

To sum up, I completely agree with this statement. In the world's history there are many examples of people, whose vital goals were essential for the society. So, if a goal is worthy, then it definitely means, that any ~~mean~~ ^{means} taken to attain it are justifiable. 44 words

"University students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field". This is a pretty popular opinion amongst students and their parents. While this opinion definitely has some truth to it, I, personally, do not agree with it. I will tell you why now.

The first reason why I think that students should not base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs is a pretty obvious one. A field of study with more available jobs might seem like a more perspective one, but in reality, the most perspective job/field of study is the one which you like most. If you choose a perspective but dull job, you may make more money, but you won't be happier than the person who chose a field of study and a job they like.

Speaking of perspective and availability, it is also important to note a few things. Firstly, both perspective and availability are factors that never stay the same. Both of them keep rapidly changing over time, and you shouldn't take them for granted. Another thing to note is that both of those factors are subjective, and it all depends on how you look at them. An unavailable job may be a very difficult both to find and on itself, but sometimes it can have better income. So if that is what you value more, an unavailable job can be actually a good job for you. Same applies to ~~effectiveness~~ perspective. Sometimes, a job without high perspectives, but with stability can sound better than a job with high career opportunities but unstable and sometimes nonexistent or lower career steps) income.

Overall, there are a lot of factors to consider when choosing a job or field of study you will dedicate your life to, but the ~~primary~~ most important one is what you want, not what is more available or can be achieved as easily.

I disagree with the claim, "If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable!"

Sometimes people have to make life-changing decisions that may have a great impact on their future. If someone has a goal, they believe that it's necessary for them to ~~reach~~ achieve it. I assume that it is not always a right decision to be harsh and do ~~so~~ whatever it takes to fulfill one's dream. Surely, it is important to do one's best to achieve their goal, especially if it is extremely significant for them, but some actions and inappropriate behaviour can make other people suffer. For instance, it is unacceptable to make decisions not thinking about others' feelings.

For example, a character of the book "In my dreams I hold a knife" wanted to kill her friend to take her place at the university of her dream. Fortunately, she had understood that such action is unacceptable, so she ~~did~~ did not do that.

Having given some thought to the topic, I believe that some means of achieving one's goals are ~~inappropriate~~ inappropriate, so they should not be taken. It is understandable that different people have different ~~goals~~ ^{desires} and do various actions to fulfill their ~~dreams~~ dreams, but we should set some limits and ask ourselves - or at least that part of ourselves that has a common sense - if other people will not be affected by our actions.

The claim says "If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable". Personally, I would say that I mostly disagree with the given quote. ~~Worthiness~~ Worthiness of the goal does not justify the harm that any means taken to attain it can do.

Undoubtedly, people's perception of importance of the goal can vary. Everyone has different aims, and those aims may be evil sometimes. A person with a rather selfish goal might find it worthy enough to justify all the harmful actions taken to achieve it. For example, a politician wants to get a high position in the government to promote his views on the policy. He thinks his goal is truly worthy. To succeed, he kills his opponents. Could these actions be justified just because his aims seemed worthy to him? I do not think so. This may look like a very naive example but it shows that people treat things differently.

Furthermore, people view ~~their~~ goals each their own. Some might think that the aim is good, and some might find it unnecessary or even bad. This way justifying the means taken to attain the goal may be difficult for some. It really just depends on the person's opinions and beliefs. That is why I think not all goals are worthy to attain them.

In conclusion, I am convinced there is no such goals that can be worthy enough to justify any means taken to attain them. I think that goals vary completely, and worthyness of the aims varies too. Everything depends on the situation and personal views.

After completing school, students should make a difficult decision of their future field of study. There are a lot of different factors which can affect this choice. While choosing, adolescents usually consider some interesting study fields.

Nowadays, teenagers also analyse labour market and base their choice on the ~~extra~~ availability of jobs in that field.

In my opinion, it is an important factor and students should choose demanded professions.

At first we should remember that our world changes very fast. Almost everyday new technologies and devices appear.

"If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable" is a very powerful and absolute claim. It means that you could do anything to achieve a certain goal and your actions would always be right. I disagree with this statement, and here I some arguments and reasons why I do:

Firstly, it is needed to say that the topic of the quote is correct, and I would agree to the claim if not for the absolutism of its structure. Being ambitious and following your dreams and goals is very mature, but not all actions you could do to reach your goal will be justifiable, some by people — your comfort zone ends where another person's one starts — or even law. That is the sole reason I disagree with the claim — it portrays that any(!) mean taken is justifiable, which includes crimes. Let's

See on ^{an} ~~some~~ example, how this claim is incorrect:

A man wants to buy a house. His goal is worthy, so he should start ~~taking~~ action. He could work two jobs at once, invest, gamble — or he could rob a bank — which would lead him straight to prison. Are all his actions justifiable? Absolutely not.

To summarise everything, I want to say that the claim itself is interesting and mature, it boosts your confidence and helps you follow your goal. However, if we transfer it to our reality, it becomes not so vibrant, because people could do anything to achieve their goals.

So all you have to do is follow your dreams, try to reach your goals, but make sure not to disrupt other people's personal spaces and not to break the law, or your goal will be forever far from you.

Nowdays parents often overlook their children's school life and their grades and tend to focus on "more important" stuff such as money and careers. School ^{plays} is a very ~~an~~ large part in ~~the~~ kid's life as it impacts future one's future and develops different social skills required in society. If children do not feel support from their loved ones they may experience anxiety and stress ~~with~~ which will in turn make them a more ~~easy~~ prey for school bullies. It is also worth noting that without a watchful eye of a parent kids more often than not forget about their homeworks and start ~~to~~ having worse grades. In high school teens feel constant pressure from school teachers and without parent's assistance they can make a lot of mistakes and wrong choices in life.

But I do not think that all parents should be required to volunteer time to their children's schools because it should be a selfmade decision and not an requirement. A parent should feel need to take an active role in child's school life. They can go to school plays, parties or participate in different various activities which may help their kids feel better about themselves.

At the same time a lot of parents often neglect their children and only an requirement can motivate them to look after their kids, ~~In that situation I can see~~ but still in long term involuntary work will never have the same results as voluntary. Even if these parents will start to take volunteer time to their children's schools, they will not contribute a lot to it.

In conclusion, I believe that parents ~~should~~ should ~~devot~~ donate their time to ~~chil~~ pay attention to ~~ke~~ their ~~chil~~ kids school and take part in school activities out of love for them.

Nowadays every person who wants to attend university face the problem of choosing the field of study. Some people choose what they like without looking in the future while others choose the field that will help them ^{to} release ~~in the future years~~ after graduating.

In my opinion, everyone should at first analyze the future job perspectives, before choosing a field of study. There are multiple ^{arguments} for that. At first, the person who already knows what he or she will be doing in few years is more organized and should worry less about the future. This person understands, what he or she wants from life, and that makes him more concentrated. It means that when you choose a field of study based on availability of jobs, you can learn more effectively and that will definitely find its impact in the future. Secondly, people, who analyzed the availability of jobs simply have more chances to get a stable job, which is quite important as stable job means stable salary. Thirdly, the students, whose choice was based on a availability of jobs are more successful. For example, a person, who have chosen something unpopular, but something he or she wants to do in the future, after graduating can face the problem with the lack of available jobs, while the other second type of people have several job opportunities as the field of study they've chosen is not ~~as~~ as rare as ~~it~~ with the example of the first type of people.

To conclude, I would like to say, that the choice ~~of choosing~~ of the study field is extremely important so everyone should think a lot before making it. Your future life depend on this choice, so, before making it, it is necessary to analyze all the pros and cons.

It is said that people who ~~really~~ highly want to achieve their aims have no blocks on their path. I definitely agree with this statement.

In my opinion, if a person desires something, then he or she is able to solve all problems. First of all, I want to give an example of a great woman who did not give up and went through a lot of rejections before she became successful. Her name is J.K. Rowling. This worldwide famous author had a goal and achieved it despite tough periods in her career. This example shows that all means taken to attain the aim are justifiable.

However, there are still a lot of people who disagree with the opinion. They say that some goals are impossible to achieve so there is no need to start or to cope with problems. Also Due to lack of motivation some people also say that making dreams come true is objectively hard, so there are no ways to gain success.

Nevertheless, I have an opposite opinion. I strongly ~~belive~~ believe that in any way a person should start to go to their aim. With the help of little steps everyone can get a result. Secondly, there are hundreds of various ways to solve problems: support of family, travelling to ~~auto~~ another country and so on, that is why a person have to try first.

In conclusion, to my mind, while seeking the key of success people should try themselves in different spheres and choose the most convenient way to achieve it as fast as they can. ~~No matters~~

Personally, I disagree with the claim "If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable" because I think that not only the achievement of the goal is important. In my opinion, the way you achieved a goal and the means which you took ~~from~~ ~~to~~ to attain it also play an important role. I think so as there are a lot of examples that prove my opinion. In all times there were people who dreamed of achieving some great goals. These people spent all their time trying to make their dream come true. They used some cruel means to do this and they never thought of their behaviour towards other people whom they met on ~~the~~ the way to their goal. They used other people to benefit from relationships with them and told lies all the time. They used any opportunity which could help them to achieve their goals even if they hurt their relatives, friends and people who helped them with their behaviour.

As a result, they achieved their goals. But these people were not happy with their lives any more. They ^{had} thought that they would become the happiest people in the world thanks to the achievement of the goal of their life but it turned out that because of the way they behaved while ^{they were} making their dream come true they lost the most important things that made them happy.

To conclude, not any means taken to ~~achieve~~ ^{attain the goal} are justifiable because if you use some cruel means and ignore ~~the~~ the feelings of people around you when you chase after the goal you can lose the most important people ~~in your life~~ and you won't be satisfied with your unhappy life.

In my There are many situations in the world history, when some important discoveries or creations were made accidentally. In my honest opinion it is not so rare accidents. To prove my words, I'll show some examples from world history.

In April 1912 the biggest ship in the world Titanic ~~had~~ sank after hitting an iceberg. After this tragedy many scientists were trying to find the ship to explore the causes of sinking. But Titanic sank in the middle of the Atlantic ocean, in the deep and cold place, and for many years it was impossible. However, in 1980-s a group of scientists were exploring the Atlantic fauna. Strangely, they started finding many pieces of metal and another parts of ship. After a few months of exploration the Titanic was found. It was one of the most important discoveries in the history of ships.

The painting of the Russian artist Malevich "Black block" is very famous around the world for its minimalism. There are many theories about how it was drawn. But the most popular theory is that it was an accident. He drew the painting, but he didn't liked it and covered it with usual black block. Years later it became the masterpiece of minimalism.

In conclusion, I would like to say, that accident discoveries or creation are usual thing in our life. We are discovering and creating many things by accident, but don't give them attention.

It's quite important that every person has own goals and dreams. He/she chooses how to attain it and realise into reality. The ^{question} ~~question~~ to be considered is whether any means taken to do it are justifiable, as some people believe. Personally, I disagree with this point of view and I'd like ~~pr~~ to propose some arguments in support of it.

To begin with, nowadays there are a great deal of ways, helping attain goals. Nevertheless, some of them are illegal and can do harm to all society, just as a decision of the Rodion Raskolnikov in the novel "Crime and Punishment" (F.M. Dostoevsky).

He not only killed ~~innes~~ innocent people, but also ruined his own life. Some kinds of taken means have a negative influence on lives. A person need to consider all consequences in advance.

Pursuing my idea ~~fur~~ further, you need to take into account that some means taken to attain may ~~be~~ destroy or change the reality and the process of ~~developing~~ development.

For instance, while his reign Richard the Lion Heart did nothing for prosperity of his own country. ~~Who~~ Various and unnumerous wars were the only thing he ^{was} concerned about.

People were suffering from high taxes and lack of essential things during it. That's why the course of further development of country had to ~~adop chan~~ be changed. It influenced on some decisions, which were made by other kings or queens, descendants of Richard I.

To summarize, I am concerned that every move ~~you do~~ done by you, ~~ere~~ decision ^{is} ~~are~~ needed to be thoroughly considered. People should remember about laws and lives of other people. None goal is worthy ~~to~~ after means that can not be justifiable, as killing or ruining ~~tives~~ all around you.

Personally, I disagree with the given claim, and I have multiple objections to it. I think, that the following claim is too radical and unreasonable.

Firstly, the worthiness of a goal can be understood differently by people. Some may think that it is even worth turning against the whole world and some may think that it is just a dream that cannot be achieved by any methods or just not worth it. So, it is a very controversial topic.

Secondly, if this claim would be right, then any person could do things that are just against human nature just to achieve his goal that he thinks is worth it. Radical thinking like this could be very harmful to society or even humanity as a whole. It could lead us to state of anarchy, that will destroy all culture, traditions and priorities of humanity.

With that being said, I think that one should make their goals achievable by ways that won't ~~have~~ stand in the way of the other people's dreams and life. Also, these ways need to be safe for the ecosystem we live in, because without it we cannot exist at all.

So, my conclusion is that everyone should have adequate goals and use harmless methods to achieve them, so that humanity can develop in peace, while inventing things that will make our life easier and enjoyable for everyone.

There is a great complexity surrounding the topic of justifying means taken to attain the goal. One might argue that in order to achieve the desired anything can be done, ~~whereas~~ other might say that there are ^{some} limits to the means. I am inclined to believe that not anything can be justified and in some cases the aim is not worth the prize.

To begin with, one achieving their goal often cannot be objective about the worthiness of his goal and ~~sacrifices~~ sacrifices that ~~e~~ which can be made. To understand the situation, individual's aim and risks coming with it fully, ^{brilliant} ~~great~~ observation and analyzation skills are needed which a vast majority do not possess. Hence, the opinion on the goal and ^{therefore} its greatness differs depending on a person.

Furthermore, it ~~can~~ in the end it can be found that in the process of attaining the goal more damage than good was done. If the duration of the time taken to achieve the desired is long enough, an individual may make more sacrifices ^{with time} desperately trying to ~~get to~~ come closer to the results and failing to realise how much harm he does.

All things considered, it is my opinion that not all means can be justified in order to attain the goal. Not only does the possibility of justifying anything ~~for~~ ^{to} achieving the desired destroys ~~people's~~ person's moral complex, it can be even dangerous to the society since even committing crimes is allowed if necessary according to the statement. It is essential to remember that even with good intentions harm can still be done.

Today entering university is probably one of the most crucial events in life of every student because the whole future literally depends on it. However, choosing an appropriate program for education can be rather tough. Some people tend to rely on their personal preferences and interests while others disagree and state that students should choose the field of study in which there are bigger chances to succeed and find a well-paid job after graduation.

In my opinion it is wrong to plunge into the sphere you don't like just to become a specialist that is in demand in modern world. It is nice when opportunities allow to work on favourite job but not everyone is that lucky. On the other case you will not be happy if you choose an unpleasant but available job. Likely you will not reach neither success nor happiness.

On the other hand some people state that if you choose the job that is available and study for it you will become rich and successful and then it will make you completely happy. I disagree with that point of view. I am absolutely sure that happiness depends on satisfaction with what you do. If you do not enjoy your everyday life and work only for money you will not be able to work long and effectively.

All in all, even though it is important to assess the demand of jobs on labour market it is not really sensible to choose a field of ^{study} relying only on this fact. It is much more important to take into account your preferences and abilities.

Many important discoveries or creations are accidental: it is usually while seeking the answer to one question that we come across the answer to another. Lots of people were hoping to solve one issue, but were able to achieve a ~~to~~ a better result.¹²⁵ The brightest example is, Alexander Fleming, who ~~invented~~ discovered penicillin completely by accident. ~~During one of his experiments he forgot~~. Another person, whose intentions lead her to surprising results is Marie ~~Curie~~ Curie with her husband. While they were conducting different experiments, the couple discovered a lot of new facts about radiation.¹²⁵ ~~After~~ Ice cream also was created by accident. Once the man left his juice outside his house. During cold night it froze. And in the morning everyone was surprised by the result, ~~a~~ juice turned into an ice cream and was very tasty.¹²⁶ We shouldn't forget about ~~the~~ Isaac Newton. While he was having a rest under an apple ~~tree~~ tree ~~one~~ an apple fell on his head. This helped the scientist to discover gravitation. ¹⁵⁵ Mendeleev is also a person, who made his discovery by accident, while sleeping. ¹⁶⁸ There are a lot more examples of people, who were lucky to ^{make a} discovery by accident. ¹⁵⁶ Some of them were not even trying to create something, however others were conducting experiments ²⁰⁰ in hope to achieve another results. ²⁰⁰ In my opinion, it comes as no surprise, because ~~if~~ when you do something, you ~~be~~ never know the result beforehand. And I hope that everyone is happy to have an unpredictable ~~very~~ ending of ^{their} ~~they~~ work, because ^{and eagerness} it can give you a ~~retirement~~ thrill to achieve ^{more.} ~~something~~ ~~you haven't~~ expected. So, I ^{completely} ~~absolutely~~ agree with the statement.

A big variety of people has a vast spectrum of goals set ~~throughout~~ ^{for} ~~throughout~~ throughout their lives. To achieve some of ~~those~~ these goals people often need to sacrifice something important in their lives. So is it inevitable to take any means to attain a goal?

Firstly, any person is restrained by the norms of the law in their country and around the world. That fact makes some of the goals unreachable and unachievable since it is not allowed to act beyond the law, even if the goal is worthy and a person dedicates its entire life to make it real.

Secondly, I think that being a human is essential for everybody and ^{it} is more important than achieving personal goals. However, if ~~the~~ a process of achieving ~~the~~ goal will not harm any people and will not break laws it is reasonable to sacrifice something important to attain it.

Since our ~~lives~~ ^{lives} is a hard process it is merely impossible to live without any troubles and challenges and attaining goals is one of the hardest struggles in our lives and different people manage with it differently. Some of them has no mercy and can justify anything to ~~attain~~ attain a goal and some are more reasonable and humanistic.

In conclusion, I believe that even if the goal is really important and its achievement will slightly affect ones life it is important to think about other people while trying to achieve it as we all live in a society and ~~in that society~~ we have to deal with it on the daily basis.

There is a position that If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. I do agree with this statement. To my mind, people, who want to achieve ~~to~~ a lot, ~~to~~ need to work hard and overcome all the difficulties they face by different means. Besides, if a person ~~succesed~~ in the process of achieving, all the instruments of attaining a goal are important and worth trying.

Firstly, after setting your goal and starting to work to achieve it, the process of working ~~to~~ can be compared to a race or a competition. A competition with your fears, with your opponements, and resources. It is essential not to ~~drop~~ give in and stop trying, so you need to use all means, everything that you are capable of to achieve it. If you stop trying and stop believing in what you are doing right at the very end, you will always regret that you didn't proceed, didn't do everything that you could.

Moreover, ~~when~~ after achieving, standing on a metaphoric mountain of your challenge, people won't judge your methods, and won't think who fair, good or bads your process of overcoming the challenges was.

All in All, people set themselves new goals every other day, but only ~~a~~ few of them actually do anything to achieve it. Work hard everyday includes using different methods and instruments which can be used to succeed. ~~Judging~~

In my opinion, judging what people had done and created, only if it was legal and didn't hurt anyone, is not quite right and fair, because working hard includes doing anything you can.

Nowadays, entering the university has been the subject of numerous discussions over recent decades. Many people argue whether university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. The elderly consider that it is vital to get a degree which is in high demand no matter the students enjoy their works or not. ~~Despite the~~ However, I strongly disagree with this point of view.

First of all, it may be really difficult for adolescents who want to enter the university to study subjects that they do not like. New generation has a lack of concentration that is why it is important for them to be interested in the material. ~~Due~~ Due to this fact they will not study at all or do it properly if the subjects do not appeal to them. This may lead to the problem that students will become unqualified specialists and it may cause troubles for the whole society.

It is worth mentioning the fact that if students' interests will not base their choice of a field of study and they will ~~be~~ have undesirable jobs in the future & it may lead to various negative consequences. For instance, everyday working routine may ~~be~~ be a cause of depression and other mental diseases, ~~They~~ ^{which} will affect the whole one's life or even ruin it.

In conclusion, I strongly believe, students should not base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. They should choose their future professions by their souls and hearts. Only in this way they will do the work their best and live ~~a~~ happy and cheerful lives.

Undoubtedly⁶, the question of meanings of discoveries or creations is really important. Nowadays people make a lot ~~of~~ discoveries but most of them are accidental. We try to find answer to one question ~~but~~ but during it we came across the other questions. To be honest, we can see this situation in all important discoveries. I agree with this.

I agree with this because all important creations always make a lot of questions. For example, We can remind discoveries that were made by Albert Einstein.

All his researches are really ~~impor~~ important because they give us a lot of information of our ~~work~~ world. and ~~at~~ we ~~hav~~ ^{had to} ~~must~~ ^{had} understood this information, ~~we~~ people ^{had} have to analyze it and after that they found a lot of new in questions like "How it work?" "Can we prove it?"

and so on. Albert Einstein's discoveries open a new dimension, and of course there are a lot of new questions that are connected ~~the~~ connected with this dimension.

Besides, we can remember ~~Open~~ remember microwave. The inventor of this discover it suddenly, but undoubtedly this invention plays a great role in our life and we can't live without it.

To ~~so~~ conclude, of course there are a lot of important ~~inve~~ discoveries that were made suddenly or something like that, ~~but it doesn't~~. But it doesn't make them unimportant. of course they play a great role in our life.

Nowadays, almost everyone has its own goals and aspires to complete them. Destinations help us to cope with complicated situations and to get through harsh periods. However, are any means taken to attain a goal are justifiable, if it is worthy? As far as I am concerned, not any step to achieve ~~your~~ goal is acceptable.

To begin with, the meaning of a goal is usually very personal. Sometimes other people are not able to understand your motivation. So, the main restriction on the way to your destination is the law. For example, if your goal is to become rich, you must not steal money. It can seem to be an easy path, but it is illegal. Also, the consequences of such mean will be negative, obviously.

Furthermore, a person should constantly remember that following ethical rules is crucial to achieve success. It is necessary to keep your mind clear and respect the personal space of surrounding people. You will not be able to live in harmony with your soul after harming someone mentally or physically. Imagine that a ~~person~~^{boy} is taking part in a competition. The ~~goal~~ goal is to win, but it is necessary to work in a group. The boy is trying to become a leader through arguing with his teammates and ~~saying~~ provoking. His actions ~~will cause~~ might cause mental problems to others. Theoretically, his means could help him to win, but after some time he will probably start to feel anxiety and will regret about acting this way.

In conclusion, there always will be some restrictions on the way to your goal. It is essential to accept them and choose the means to achieve it wisely.

Currently not many parents take part in meetings and other events in their children's schools. I think all parents should be required to volunteer time to their children's schools for two reasons.

Firstly, if teacher does everything by himself or by herself it takes a lot of time. Sometimes they spend hours by checking the students' works. Teachers also have to prepare for the lessons at the weekends. Finding necessary and interesting information is not easy. If all parents help teachers, they can do all the work much faster. For example, all ~~parents~~ my classmates' parents came to the school one evening to decorate class for the party. They tidied the whole room and made all preparations having spent only one hour!

Secondly, if parents volunteer time to their children's schools they improve relationships with their children. Spending time with the teacher, parents learn something new about their kids. New information will help parents to understand their children. For instance, my mother talked yesterday with my teacher. She learnt that I had got a bad mark and supported me. ~~My mother~~ In addition, my mother explained me the task in which I had made a mistake.

In conclusion I would like to say that parents should pay attention on their children's education because their children's future life depends on it. Of course, ~~the~~ spending free time at school can be difficult for parents. However, in my opinion ~~the~~ volunteering time to children's

Schools ~~are~~ is necessary.

Nowadays ~~more~~ people became more selfish and arrogant. That's why they are tend to think that if the goal is "working, then any means to attain it are justifiable. But I do not agree with this statement. "

In my opinion, if in order to achieve your goal, you have to do something awful, you shouldn't try to attain it. For example, you are working with your friend in "the office, And the manager tells you that only one of you can get a promotion. Of course, both of you want to get it. So, you decide to betray your friend. You come to the manager and tell him about your friend's disadvantages, the manager decides to promote you. ~~Then~~ Your friend learns about this situation. You got a promotion, but you lost a friend. "

Moreover, sometimes in order to achieve a goal, people may do something illegal. For example, some people may commit financial crimes, in order to get rich. ~~Some people may even murder~~ Some may even murder the others. That's really horrible and awful. In this case the goal doesn't work by ~~the~~ any means. " Another example ~~may~~ ~~be~~ maybe cheating at the exam. Of course you'll pass it, but you won't learn anything. Also, it is unfair, because other students will ~~reg~~ write it without cheating and may not pass it, as ^{well as} you if you weren't cheating.

~~and not~~ In conclusion, I would like to say that ~~non goals are not worthy any~~ even if a goal is worthy, not any means taken to attain it are justifiable, because some times you may lose more, than you can gain.

I was asked to discuss the extent which is "University students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field."

I disagree with that ~~positi~~ claim. In this essay I am going to comment my position and provide some relevant arguments to support it.

~~First of all, I think that the choice of the ^{study} profession is very important for university students because they choose what they are going to do for a long time or maybe for whole life.~~

~~Because of this I believe that choosing~~

First of all, I think that the choice of a field of study is very important for university students because it is very possible that they will work in the same field. Due to this fact, I believe that this choice should ~~be~~ not be made only on a ^{base of an} availability of the jobs in the field.

I suppose that university students should ~~base~~ ~~made~~ this choice on their ~~interests~~ personal interests in certain ~~study~~ field of study. Listen to their hearts and ~~at~~ choose.

Because when a person is interested in something he or she can face any troubles and overcome them. If ^{no} students are interested in what they study, they will work much more persistent and harder.

Also, things ~~etc~~ are ~~chan~~ changes ~~at~~ very fast in our developing world. Some jobs appear, some disappears. ~~It~~ It is really naive to make choice of ~~a~~ field of study only on the base of an availability of jobs ⁱⁿ in that field, because the situation can change very quickly.

One more thing that should be paid attention to is a average wages of people who ~~has~~ already worked work in that field. I think this is important too (not ~~is~~ as important as ^{having} ~~interests~~ personal interest, though), because your future job should provide enough money for your living.

In conclusion, the ~~choice~~ choice of a field of study is very important and in my opinion it should be based on personal interest ~~and~~ above all and not only on the availability of jobs in that field.

There recently emerged a debate over requiring parents to volunteer time to their children's schools. I consider that this topic is one of the most significant to discuss. I strongly agree that responsible parents should find some time to participate in their kids' school life. I would like to support my position with two reasons.

Firstly, there can't be nothing more crucial than being involved in children's business. School is a huge part of their routine where they spent more than eight hours. Parent is a person who must provide a little student with love and care. Volunteering time to his or her school can show how much mother and father are interested in their child's life. It is an opportunity to confess a kid that parents are always ready to leave all the things behind and help their child whenever it is needed. Moreover, spending time at school is a great chance to find out amazing details about student's everyday habits: friends, interests, hobbies, talents and more.

Secondly, everyone should remember that nowadays teachers are too busy with exhausting paperwork. Parents' support is really helpful for them. This way teachers can ~~can~~ focus on studying process and don't waste energy solving problems that can be cared by parents. Giving knowledge is a hard task that takes years and decades. Unity of teachers and parents is the strongest way to raise intelligent, ~~kind-hearted~~ patient and polite children.

In conclusion, I believe that volunteering time to the children's schools is not an option but a need. Students can't exist without support. It's complicated for them. Both school and parents ~~are~~ should put kids' feelings and problems on the first place.

I agree to a significant extent that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. ~~It goes without saying that~~ Most people have dreams and they are ready to do anything to make them come true. Also, we only live once, that's why any variants of reaching a goal, any endeavors are valuable and justifiable. To support my point of view, I'm going to provide a couple of arguments.

Firstly, I can confidently say that it is normal to make mistakes because people learn a lot from them. Not understanding that may jeopardise one's chance to becoming successful. Steve Jobs, for example, wasn't terrified of making mistakes or losing. He made a long way to becoming a millionaire and it wasn't perfect. Steve experienced a company crush and still managed to end up as a ~~former~~ CEO of ~~running~~ a thriving business. His example shows that the path to reaching a goal is not that fascinating and it contains difficulties, but if ~~a goal~~ it is worth it, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable.

Secondly, every decision one makes plays a big, often crucial, role in their life. For instance, ~~I'm ap-~~plying to a university and I have to choose from my goal is to get into a university. I decide to start preparing at the end of eleventh grade, but then I realise that it's too late and it will be hard for me to successfully reach my goal. That's why I take multiple lessons with tutors and eventually become a student of my dream university. My way of reaching a goal was appalling, but I succeeded. Was it worth it? Yes, it was. Would I make such a decision now? No, I would not. But I got what I wanted and this is the only thing that matters.

All in all, I strongly agree with the ~~saying~~ statement: "If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable." ~~People rarely make only right decisions and it is okay~~ You have to try everything until you accomplish it, no matter how.

I definitely agree with this statement. As much as I want to believe that following my dreams is a great future, I think my dreams might be a bad career choice. Sure, you can become a Freelance digital artist instead of a basic office ~~job~~ ^{worker}, but statistics show that the latter is a lot more stable and profitable.

Stability is as important of a factor as availability. It is better to yearn for a stable job, where you know exactly what your salary is and when you are going to get it.

In my opinion, you should always have a backup career path. That way, if something goes unlike you planned, you can still get a job. If you find out you ~~are~~ ^{are} underqualified or there is just no need for employees of your profession, and you don't do not have a backup plan, it will be very hard to find a constant way of profit.

Speaking of unwanted jobs, it can happen a lot in a small field. It is common sense really, it is not hard to realize that the less jobs there are, the less available spaces there are in an industry. However, this problem ~~becomes~~ is becoming much less of an issue day by day. There are almost 300 jobs being created every year. And that number is rapidly rising.

I believe this ~~statem~~ statement is not only true, but is also a great advice for people who can't choose ~~whether~~ between a stable job and a job they like.

~~the~~ already explained my point of view, but it is different for everyone. Everyone is entitled to their own opinion.

Many people believe that any means taken to achieve their goal are justifiable. To my mind, I ~~it~~ assume that ~~every~~ any mean is to ^{attain} ~~achieve~~ one's dream is understandable until the person ~~thinks~~ gets to a point when he thinks he is above the law. To support my point of view, I am going to provide a couple of arguments.

Firstly, I strongly believe that if a person wants to achieve his a goal, his actions should not cross the line and ~~a~~ harm other people. As an example I want ~~to~~ describe the way my mother achieved her main goal as an example. She had a ~~big~~ dream to enroll at a university and, after that, get a well-paid job. To attain it, she did everything within her power: spent many hours studying, tried her hand at different jobs and much more. As a result, she got what she wanted and ~~felt~~ enjoyed ~~her~~ have been enjoying her life ever since.

On the contrary, sometimes people forget that they are a part of society and start ~~doing~~^{taking} unjustifiable actions to achieve their goals. I do not accept this type of behaviour and to challenge my position. I am going to discuss the main plot of ~~the~~ the novel, 'Crime and Punishment'. The main character, Raskolnikov, committed a crime to prove himself and ~~e~~ that he is better than everybody else. Not only did he end other people's lives, but also suffered from it. Nobody should. This novel is a great example of what people should not do to achieve their dream.

All in all, I think ~~not every~~^{that} goal is worth ~~not every~~ sometimes means to attain a goal are not justifiable if it goes to a point where other people are hurt.

Creative writing - Topic № 1

In this modern world of connections and technologies, ambitions and motives play a major role to achieve one's goals. Some people claim that if a goal is worthy, then any means to attain it are justifiable. As for me, I rather disagree with this point of view. Let me explain why.

It goes without saying that most of the time people's goals sound unrealistic. For example, teenagers often want to make good money or make a certain amount by the end of the year, which often results in nothing as they don't have enough knowledge about the path they've chosen. On the other hand, some people are good at setting their goals as they set realistic results and learn more about its potential.

However, there is another detail which proves that not everything a one can do to attain their goal is justifiable. A lot of people are selfish and they tend to choose their goals without considering the consequences they may lead to. Let's take any celebrity as an example. They all used to be non-famous and wanted people to know about them. Therefore, ~~most~~ most of them often face mental issues and feel unsafe walking out. On the other hand there will be good-set goals which would not harm anyone and make them happy.

To sum up, I'd like to say that even though some people conscious of their goals and potential results, most of the time we are unaware of what our goals mean ~~and~~ lead to.

"If goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable"

Nowadays every person in the world makes thousands of decisions every day. Some of them are easy, but other ones make person to question himself/herself. There are people who say that "If goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable", but is this phrase always right? In my opinion it is not ~~always~~, let me give some examples to prove my point of view.

My first example will be situation when actions character of book made led to multiple deaths. I am speaking about book "Crime and punishment" written by russian ~~author~~ writer Dostoyevsky. In that book main character, Raskolnikov, kills old lady who was, if we compare to terms of our time, owner of lombard. Goal of Raskolnikov may be seen as reliable — he wanted to rob her and to spend her money on charity. But during robbery he had been seen by sister of old lady. Raskolnikov ^{seen} had no other option but to get rid of her too. Later in book reader finds out that sister of old woman was pregnant, which means that Raskolnikov destroyed three lives during his crime. But what had he done with money you may ask. He just buried them under some rock. Raskolnikov understood that main reason of this crime was not worthy goal, but his wish to prove his theory and ~~satisfy~~ satisfy his own ego. Were the means taken in this situation justifiable? In my opinion - not at all

Some people may say that history proves rightfulness of this ~~sen~~ phrase "If goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable". I have to prove that history holds a lot of examples it is not ~~alw~~ always correct. For example, ~~do you think~~ recreating country after defeat in war and revenge may be seen as worthy goal, but Adolf Hitler ~~didn't~~ decided to try doing that. No one will say that I ~~am~~ am not right if I say means taken to attain it were not justifiable

Nowadays there is an opinion that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. I strongly disagree with this claim.

I totally understand that the labour market is very unsustainable. There are a lot of jobs which are appearing every day and the same number of disappearing. That is why for university students it may be hard to choose a field of study. And it is ~~absolutely~~ absolutely normal. But choosing your study path basing on the availability of jobs is a bad idea. Teenagers can choose subjects they don't like. This will probably cause huge problems in the future. These people won't be ^{both} hardworking, ^{and} won't be interested in the results of their labour/because they might even hate what they do. It is a very important side of the question.

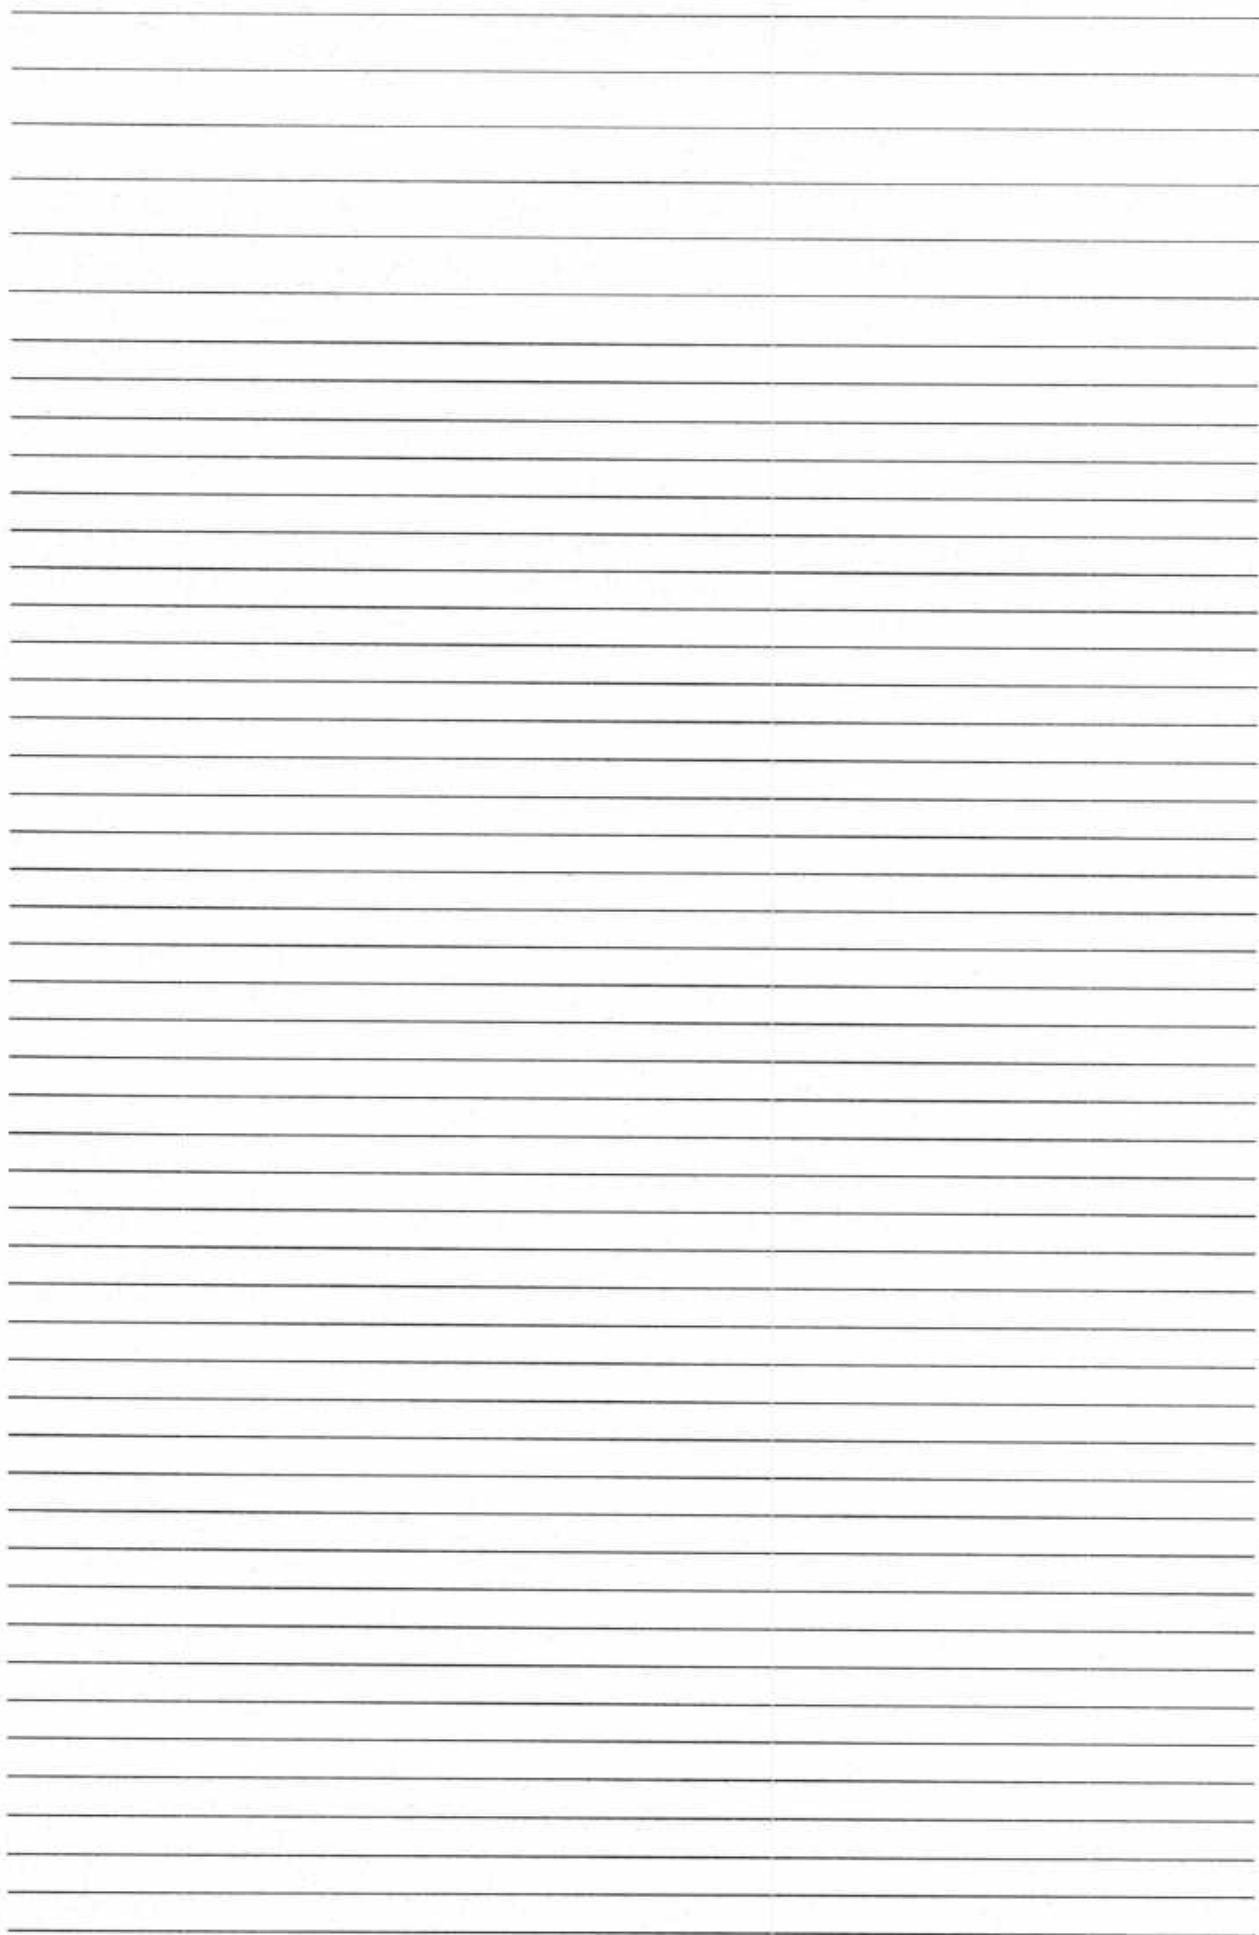

Moreover, in this situation of choice talented and given young people may not realise their potential. In this case country can lose sharp-minded professionals and then regret about it. I also consider that the majority of students will change their qualification and working work not using their degrees. So what is the usefulness of this decision?

The last but not least is that if students don't like their university program, they won't go further and get the Master's Degree. It will lead to the decrease in the educational system.

All in all, I think that students should choose their field of ~~studying~~ study basing on their interests. I strongly believe that smart person with willingness to study and expand their knowledge will find their place in life and work hard to build a career, live prosperously.

I disagree with the fact that all parents should be required to volunteer time to their children's schools.

Firstly, parents have already had quite a few requires about their children's socialization, ~~and~~ methods of growing, ~~some~~ and other. There is a big array of what parent must do. I don't even say about alone fathers and mothers who is made work harder to save children's happy childhood. It is why some parents can not to have any free time to volunteer. ~~in~~ If this statement is a real rule, ^{in some schools} I think, we ~~may~~ should blame the administration of ^{these} schools for providing parents slavery.

Secondly, we need to remember what does word "volunteer" mean. It means that person does some job ~~because~~ for free to make the world better. Volunteering comes from the heart. It can't be required. According to this, ~~the~~ parent's free labour hidden under the mask of "volunteering" looks more as a punishment than work they do with great intentions. Schools ~~the~~ should solve their problems ~~by~~ using own possibilities instead of creating new demands for ~~the~~ parents working and not working parents.

In conclusion, I think that person who offered this idea has no idea about how ~~many~~ many things parents do for their children. Some of them don't even have two or three hour of free time they can relax or have fun. In this case, ~~making~~ creating rules like this will ~~be~~ ~~not~~ have serious responsibility for kids who won't get enough parent's attention and will separate from their families what really ~~will~~ will decrease ~~the~~ unity of society

Many individuals believe that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. Others believe that this poses a morality question: — is the goal morally correct? This essay will explore both views on this matter. 40

112 Proposers argue that any goal is worth fighting for. If you have the capability to achieve such goal — then ~~and~~, whether it is right or wrong, any method to do so is applicable. Certain methods of achieving your goal pose difficulties, which is why any method that is comfortable for you is okay. On top of that, external factors shouldn't affect your desired way of reaching your goal, they only slow you down. Your chosen method, even if it's morally wrong, should be efficient. You spend much less time attempting to reach your goal, compared to a method that isn't suitable for your needs. 143

On the other hand, advocates against this statement say that a goal should be morally Correct. For example: you need money. There are a multitude of ways of reaching this, like robbing a bank. This method is morally incorrect, as you are harming society and obtaining your goal in an illegitimate way. This leads me to my second point. If you reach an achievement in a morally incorrect way, you are only cheating yourself. Humans have a kind-hearted nature, and you're only going to feel guilty after reaching your goal in a wrong way.

In my opinion, achieving your goals in any way is only justifiable, when the path is morally correct, as in some ways, you may harm someone, or even yourself.

Many important discoveries or creations are accidental, because in a lot of sciences people can search and find information, which can help to get the answer for several questions.

I agree with the ~~agree~~ claim. Many scientists get the researching to have the answer for the one question, but usually they find a lot of information about the subject or something else. This fact can be explained by the proses, in which people, who read books, newspapers, search something on the Internet can have a lot of knowledge, which can help him to do an important discoveries.

The second fact, which can explain the claim in the task is that many answers to the other questions have the similar idea. The most important ~~strong~~ argument that is if the scientist want to do some of the creations, he need to be clever, get a lot knowledge about the theme, & on ~~whether~~ ^{they} which ~~they~~ have to do something. Internet and something else resources can help ~~the~~ people to find something new or something, that they don't see or know earlier. This information can help the people to do a discoveries.

To the conclusion i want to say that many important discoveries or creations are accidental. The facts, which i was write ~~earlier~~ earlier can explain it, because scientists get the information from the Internet, books or something else, and this information can come across with the other answers there.

Many important discoveries or creations are accidental: it is usually while seeking the answer to one question that we come across the answer to another.

In our life we have a lot of challenges and problems, dreams, questions. Actually, all know that this is hard and terrible. ~~It~~ⁱⁿ all our life we always get a few questions which haven't have not answers. Often we don't know who can answer our questions. This answers are big ~~and~~ like the ocean and hard like the jungle forest. ~~Our~~ And our questions are like the least on the tree in this big forest. ~~Plants~~ Sure, this one ~~a~~ question acrosses the answer to another.

Because people have several answers for one question ^{and} they ~~because~~^{actually} come across cause we get ~~a~~ a lot of answer for only one question. It is a li I think it is a life balance between answers and questions. Every day we meet face to face with a lot of people who alway have question. Sometime we do not know how to answer and answer

I have In my opinion, this is the right version that the answer to one question ~~that we~~ comes across the answer to another. For example, I remember one situation, when I have a question. I did not know the social science like the subject ~~at~~ my school. I get a question to my teacher, I think that she did know the answer, but she describe this item to me. So, she did not answer to my question but also describe ^{to me} ~~my~~ new information that helped with my ~~is~~ another question.

Choosing a field of study is one of the most complicated and important choices in our lives because this decision can significantly impact on our future. That is why we should make this decision wisely. I am inclined to think that field of study should be based on personal preferences, not ~~only~~ considering availability of jobs in this sphere.

First and foremost, choosing a field of study only relying on future job opportunities is a total mistake because in this case you completely forget about your interests. Attending tedious and useless for you lessons is just a waste of time. So it is of high importance to pay attention to your inner voice and follow your feelings not ~~future~~ the idea of future opportunities. Because when you ~~acquire~~ acquire knowledge that brings you pleasure you are on the right path in your life.

Secondly, job opportunities always change so by the time you passed your exams and entered the university ^{foregone} these opportunities can become absolutely different. In this case, you are learning that you don't want with the knowledge that it has zero future opportunities. Also studying subjects that don't bring you pleasure can be detrimental to your health because you will always be anxious about your future. This can lead to dangerous diseases.

In conclusion, I want to say that always follow your heart not mind because only in this way you will get what you want in ~~your~~ life. ~~The~~ ~~state of~~ Trust yourself, it is the best advice in choosing your future career. Jobs opportunities exist today but tomorrow it can disappear so ~~be~~ ~~be~~

interests and feelings.

The question of choosing a job bothers many students and especially their parents, since not every potential student will agree to work on a company that has no common with his interests. Moreover, for many young people is not the question, unlike for their parents who can even force their children to enter the perspective university for a well-paid future job.

Personally, I agree that university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. It is an obvious that money make round the world. However, a teenager who is the future student can like many things to do and in most cases they decide to choose a hobby as a future career, considering that nothing is impossible for a willing heart and not thinking about their future salary. As for me, such hobbies as playing the guitar, playing football can become a way of making money for a very little number of people as it is quite competitive kinds of jobs and usually there is no availability of working places. It is firm but fair. Sometimes students should not risk. It is a success for them to choose a field of study after which they can find a job with high salary and can afford everything that begin to hate their favorite kind of activity being absolutely skint.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize that students should think about their life after university more. After that they will understand that it is vital to choose a field of study based on the availability of jobs there. They should become specialists of honourable jobs and be required by employers. There is the only right way.

University students should have their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field.

To begin with, this topic can be considered quite controversial and there are many opinions on it. Sooner or later students face the problem of choosing a field of study and this decision ~~is~~ might influence their future lives. Personally, I do not agree with the claim. Now ~~I will~~ ~~is~~ ~~am~~ I am going to present and ~~will~~ prove some arguments to support my point of view.

Firstly, university students ~~can~~ should not rely on the availability of jobs when choosing a field of study because some professions may not suit them. If a person decides to study ~~because~~ due to have rewarded and popular job, it can be a mistake. It ^{can be explained by the fact that} ~~is because~~ students have diverse features of character and they should choose the job taking this ~~into~~ into account. Moreover, the job may be uncoveted and uninteresting for them, which can result in unsatisfaction of life.

Secondly, it is wrong to choose a field of study because of the availability of jobs as the economy is dynamic. Actually, it may be impossible to predict the relevance of the certain job in the future. Some jobs and professions can become unpopular for companies and irrelevant before university students will graduate. In addition, a person that has motivation and determination can ~~be successful~~ ~~reach~~ ~~the~~ ~~top~~.

In conclusion, it can be a mistake for students to base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs. This decision can cost them a monotonous and stressful work, which does not suit them at all. Obviously, with such job students will fail with maintaining a healthy work-life balance and they may feel frustrated. That is why it is better for students to choose coveted field of study. (286)

It is said that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable, but I personally ~~disagree~~ disagree with this statement. Bad things such as lying or betraying other people can't be justifiable under no circumstances. These things can make you feel worse and guilty and also can affect someone else's life not in a good way.

For example, if a child broke his mother's favourite vase and said it did his sister, he won't be punished, but his sister will. This situation may cause problems in their future relationship, so they won't be close or ~~forces~~ won't trust each other, when they should be the biggest supporters for his or her own sibling. This situation shows how a wish and a goal not to be punished by parents can ruin the relationship with the sibling just by one action.

Moreover, we can face such situations in our grown-up life. For example, your co-worker may accuse you in not doing your job well enough to get your place or just kick you out because of his personal interests. He may lie to the boss just to reach his goal, but at the end even if he gets what he wanted, he will know that he got a higher place on a career ladder not because he is a ~~professing~~ professional, ~~and has a lot of skills~~. He got it only because of being jealous to the other worker which makes him a bad person. And, as for me, being a bad person with a high position at work is much worse than being a good person, but with a lower position.

To sum up, to reach your goals you don't have to cheat or lie, you will get everything what you want just by being determined and ~~more~~ by being a good person.

Of course there is no doubt that volunteering has got some insane attention, especially these days. You may think that it has only ~~good~~ ^{positive} sides. Well, if you look closer you will see the true sight of it.

Volunteering in schools was always a thing. Students get some decent communication skills, ~~they are~~ ~~to~~ learn how to help others and so on. But why should parents volunteer, spending their time not on earning money to buy food, but on ~~some~~ activities like drawing or warning little kids not to run in hallways. I think that students have to volunteer at their schools themselves, as there are so many situations when a parent could ~~make~~ ^{make} ~~not~~ ^{not} do it. For example, if a parent works in an emergency service, saving lives of others or if he is a CEO of some big company who has no free time.

Adding more, if there is some sort of conflict between the children and parents. Bad mood would affect the productivity. But things go worse when you understand that volunteering is not something you are required to do. It is only up to you whether you want to volunteer or not. Volunteering is not a type of thing that you must do no matter what. You should decide yourself and do not listen to someone else. And it has always been like that.

Considering all that, I would completely disagree with the statement that parents are required to volunteer in children's schools.

Many students are having problems with choosing a field of study. Some of them just opt for what they like. But some on the contrary are making their decision according to availability of working somewhere in the future. Should ~~with~~ university students base their choice on the availability of jobs in this field? In my opinion, ~~definitely no~~, but in order not to be unfounded I will argue my point of view.

To begin with it can cause overhiring. There are many people who also see the availability of jobs in your field. After graduation ~~it can cause~~ they all will also try to hire to the job so the concurrency increases and this job will no longer be available. For example, in 1990s many people wanted to become economists which caused the lack of creative professions, such as designers, ~~and teachers~~. Translators and teachers

In addition, if you like your job you will definitely be successful in it, because for you it's not just a job - this is your passion. We have so many historical examples of people who made a great success and popularized their field. When Steve Jobs was making his first Apple computer, nobody but his wife believed in him. Nowadays Apple is the biggest company in the world which earns billions of dollars a year.

In conclusion I'd like to say that no matter there are any available professions or not - you will be successful because you're obsessed with it. Then, no one beats you and you will definitely be hired to the best job in your field of study.

It goes without saying that choosing a field of study is a main problem for the university students. Some people believe that students should base their choice on the availability of jobs in the field. However, others think that there are more things that they ~~should~~ ⁷⁴ consider while choosing a field of study. I believe that adolescents shouldn't consider only the availability of jobs in the field. Now I'm going to prove my opinion.

While making a choice of a field of study there is a lot to think about. Firstly, students should ~~consider~~ consider their own abilities and preferences and chose a field that is suitable for them and enjoyable. Secondly, they should ask for advice from adults that they are close with. Adults are older than students so they ~~can~~ ⁶⁶ give a hand and help using their life experience.

Nonetheless, some people insist that students ~~should~~ should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. Their opinion on the topic can be taken in the account. Indeed, availability of jobs in the field is an important factor that should be considered. Without ~~the~~ the job offers it's really hard to keep doing things that ~~students~~ students have been studying for. That's why while making this choice it might not be a bad idea to chose the field with a great amount of job offers. ⁹⁰

All in all, making a choice of a field of study ~~is~~ ⁴¹ still a problem nowadays and though the availability of jobs is an important factor students should consider other factors such as their own abilities and adult's opinions as well.

Many people argue whether any means taken to attain a goal are justifiable if the goal is worthy. ~~I think~~ Personally, I agree with the claim. I believe that humanity cannot progress without victims ~~and~~ and all important decisions in history took lives of people. To prove my position, let's move on to history.

Firstly, a great argument for the statement is the example of founding Saint-Petersburg. Peter the Great insisted on the concrete place for the ~~the~~ city, ~~the~~ conditions were unbelievably bad and numerous people died while building the city. But when Saint-Petersburg was finished, Russia got a city with a unique geographic position. It changed Russian status between other countries and ~~the~~ Saint-Petersburg ^{became a} ~~the~~ place where a part of Russian army on ships appeared, what ^{gave} ~~made~~ Russian army ~~more~~ much more force. This city is not only a meaningful geographic place, but also a cultural capital of Russia. It offers its tourists to visit numerous museums and exhibitions and to enjoy ~~the~~ the outstanding architecture of its buildings, ~~and~~ cathedrals and churches. That is why building Saint-Petersburg^{is} worthy comparing it to the quantity of harmed builders.

Secondly, I think that undoubtful proof of the statement is decision of Kuttuzov to burn Moscow in war between Russia and France in 1812. Russia lost its capital, but France did not get it either. Also this was the only measure not to lose Russian army. So Russia lost Moscow but won the war, that is why burning the capital was worthy.

To sum things up, I think that great aims require great effort and means taken to attain it are justifiable. ~~I think~~ From my point of view, history has proved it.

It is a hot discussion topic whether university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. Let me consider different viewpoints, arguments for and arguments against this ~~the~~ claim, and therefore state my opinion on it.

To start with, if you choose a field of study with a wide range of job opportunities, you ~~are~~ ~~not~~ experience less stress ~~after you graduate~~, because you know that your job is vital, ~~needed for people~~ and you ~~not~~ won't have any problems when finding a stable ~~of~~ workplace.

Moreover, if there is a wide range of jobs available in ~~the~~ the field, it means that there's a high demand on ~~that~~ them, ~~specific kind of jobs, so that the salaries are supposed to be high~~ which means the salaries are high.

For example, studying economics in the university provides a person with such ~~career~~ career options as economist, financial expert, tax expert, ~~manager~~, etc. which are all demanded in international companies.

This field of study provides you with numerous job opportunities that guarantee stable ^{and} prosperous ~~and~~ ~~happy~~ future. ~~for you~~ But money doesn't buy happiness...

On the other hand, when ~~study~~ choosing a study field you should ~~you should~~ consider what you like ~~firstly~~ most, sth. that would bring you happiness.

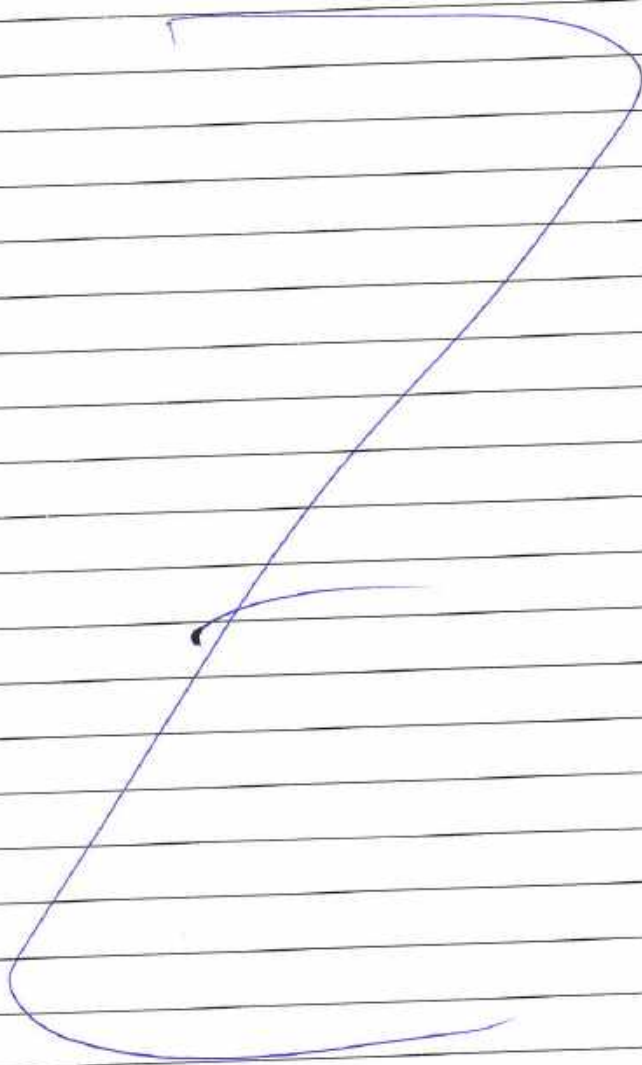

Above all, you ~~not~~ always have the chance to start your own company, create an innovative product. ~~and~~ ~~be your own boss~~

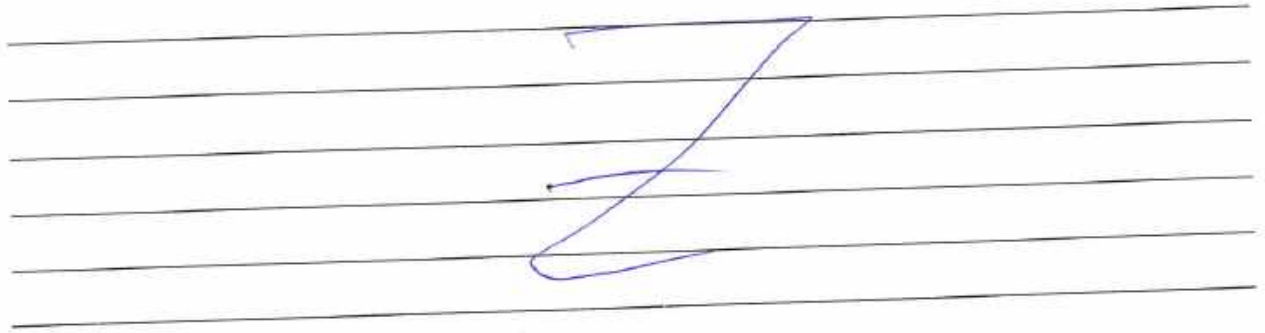

For instance, studying art ~~is~~ doesn't give you much job opportunities, apart from artist and a designer. But, if you are determined enough, you might start your business, promote it, ~~and your pictures~~ and your pictures ~~not~~ will be popular, expensive and wanted worldwide.

What's more, your company may create the workplaces for people like you, which will further boost the economies.

To draw the conclusion, I personally think that the arguments against this claim outweigh the ones for. Basing your choice of a field of study on your wish, something you desire is far ~~more~~ better than just on the availability of jobs in that field, because not only will it make you happier, but it will also help the society, which is paramountly important nowadays.

There's a popular claim that many important discoveries or creations are accidental: it is usually while seeking the answer to one question that we come across the answer to another.

Many people argue whether this statement is true or false.

Personally, I ~~agree~~ totally agree with this phrase. And I am going to tell you the reason why I think so.

To begin with, I would like to say that while seeking the answer to one question we explore a concrete field of study and find an enormous number of information. Investigating it our brain gets a lot of new facts and then they can be connected. Connecting them, we can find out something new that has never been explored before. This fact proves that some important discoveries or creations are accidental. While we explore something we can get something absolutely new.

Moreover, I want to give you an example of ~~thes~~ this phenomenon. A popular physic scientist, Isaac Newton, was thinking about the law that he wanted to invent when an apple fell and hit his head. Connecting this accident ~~to~~ with his findings he had done before he ~~had~~ invented a gravitation law. This historic fact is also a great example that many important discoveries are accidental.

In conclusion, I would like to say that it is true that many important discoveries or creations are accidental. It is usually while seeking the answer to one question that we come across the answer to another. Some historic facts and logical conclusions prove this statement so I can't disagree with it.

As a matter of fact, people set their own goals. After some time they reach them and then, this is where they think success comes. In fact, it does, but looking back, many people realise that such "success" cost them a real fortune. That's why I oppose the idea that all means taken are justifiable when it comes to achieving a goal.

Firstly, there is a high chance that taken careless unfair measures will only receive a backlash from the society. It's widely known that deceiving people is one of the biggest sins that has completely no excuses. For instance, many actors, who are ^{world-wide} popular, try to hide the way they became famous due to the fact that most of them reached success by turning to unfair measures such as buying their contestants or even the victory. Sadly, nearly all of them end up being criticised and hated by the public.

Second Last, but not least, many people forget about their friends' or family members' feelings when trying to reach a goal. There is nothing as scary as losing all the people, whom you loved and looked up to just because you didn't treat them well. For example, it's well-known how much does a career mean, especially for students, but hardly do people think what may happen if they dedicate themselves only to studying. Commonly, they won't keep in touch with other and then, burnout. Here comes the question: "Was it even worth it?"

Hence, rarely all measures taken are justifiable. That's why before making a decision people should think twice whether it's worth doing or not.

Everybody has to make a crucial decision that will determine a great sphere in their life. Two of them are choosing a major subject and a field of study. But how? There is a vast variety of options that are, at a certain rate, different and also connected.

In psychology there are three aspects that should be taken into consideration: want, need, can. They are equally significant for maintaining equilibrium between professional career, domestic life and spiritual development. I prefer to keep up to this thought - the availability of jobs is only one third of compounding the perfect occupation.

With that said, I think that the availability is not the primary foundation for electing a field of study. First of all, the student could not be capable of pursuing a particular career. However, that person could have a talent in another field. Forcing them into some other study would be a waste of time and effort. Second, if one hates their job, they won't have a purpose to improve, becoming an incompetent specialist. If they do continue working without any desire, they could burnout. In this case, they won't become a valuable worker as well.

Summing up, the needed professions constantly change, so choosing a field of study only on the availability of jobs is like a shot in the dark. It's better to be an impeccable specialist, not to fear any hard times.

Everybody has to make a crucial decision that will determine a great sphere in their lives. & Two of them are choosing a major subject and field of study. But how? There is a vast variety of options that are, to a certain extent, different and also connected.

In ~~psychology~~ psychology there are three aspects that should be taken into consideration: want, need, can. They are equally significant ~~necessary~~ significant for maintaining balance between professional career and domestic life and spiritual development. I prefer to keep up to this thought – the availability of jobs is only one third of compounding the perfect occupation.

With that said, I think that the availability is not the primary foundation for electing a job field of study. First of all, the student could not be capable of pursuing a particular career. They could not have what. However, that person might have a talent in another field. Forcing them into some other science would be waste of time and effort. Second, if one hates their job, they won't have a purpose to improve becoming an incompetent specialist. If they continue working without any desire, they could get a burnout. In this case they won't become a valuable profe worker as well.

It is common knowledge that nowadays due to the extensive development of the working sphere children have become more deprived of their parents' attention than they used to be. I reckon that it is of ^{importance} ~~burning~~ high ~~issue~~ to take some urgent measures so as to involve adults into the ~~the~~ school life of their adolescents and strengthen the ties between generations.

To start with, it can be ^{efficient} ~~advisable~~ to make parents volunteer time to educational institutions so that they may make changes into the area where their children study. Without doubt, all parents are interested in making the up-bringing environment ~~the~~ most comfortable and friendly zone. Thus, organising school events may become a great opportunity to influence the atmosphere where their children are taught.

On top of that, volunteering activity may bound relatives together. Being involved into the school life, parents may immerse into the sphere of interests of their children as well as find the most relevant approach to them. In view of the fast technological development, the generation gap has increased substantially in recent years. Thus, school is one of the place where ^{social} ~~new~~ ~~ends~~ among contemporary teenagers are revealed.

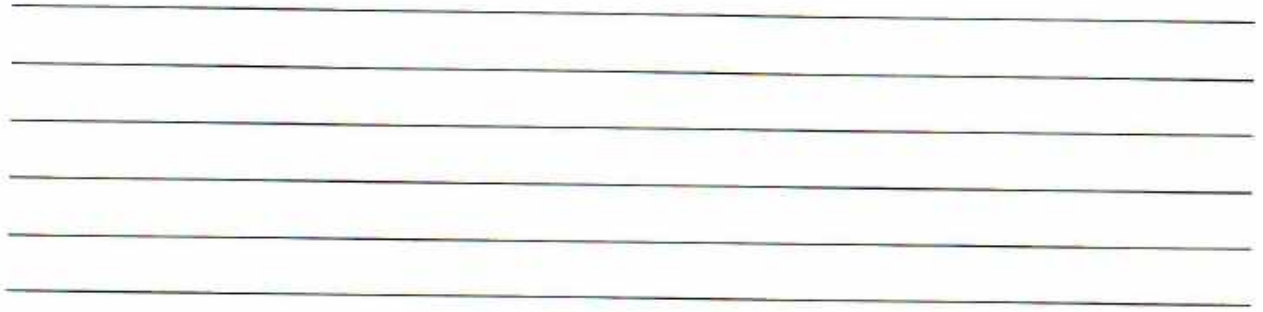

To crown it all, volunteering ~~to~~ ^{for} schools may become a kind of a certain parents' control over situations that occur there. Even though these ~~the most of these institutions~~ Mostly, these institutions are ~~govern~~ ^{subjected} to the ~~for~~ state, that is why, sometimes the rate of discipline ~~is~~ inferior. Getting engaged into this environment and communicating ^{with} ~~to~~ the teachers may be beneficial in terms of controlling ~~the~~ ^{how the school} administration.

^{In conclusion,}
~~To sum it up,~~ I am inclined to believe that it is significant to require parents to volunteer time to schools so as to make the ~~educatio~~ academic process and the educational area more transparent ~~and~~ and fair. Anyway, it is up to parents to ~~make~~ do their best so as to make their children's life better.

There is a quite famous statement: "If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable". In brief, it frames the idea that any damage ~~and~~ ~~which~~ could be forgiven if the reason behind it is worthy enough. ~~Many people~~ As for me, I ~~disagree~~ agree with that claim. If we are speaking of the well-being of the whole ~~country~~ ^{community} or even the ~~whole~~ humanity itself, we can actually put some lives ^{under} the risk.

The best ~~any~~ example of such situation is practically every war. The ruler of a country have to sacrifice some part of his army in order to achieve something greater. Of course, it may seem selfish, especially if the aim is to simply expand the territories, but when it comes to bringing piece to the country, all the means taken are justifiable.

For another argument we can recall the ^{well-known} Russian revolution. The goal of the revolutionists was to change the political system of the country. There were a lot of problems coming with the monarchy involving the lower classes. So, ^{in order} to escape such issues within the society, a lot of lives were sacrificed.

In conclusion, although the statement ~~is~~ can ~~be~~ sound harsh, it's quite inevitable nowadays.

Nowadays many university students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. However, many adolescents may have some troubles with it. The ~~the~~ majority of people who choose their field of study according to the availability of jobs in that field advise students to do so. And this have several reason and I am going to ~~presen~~ express my opinion now.

Firstly, the labour market is always changing. & Through the century, many a lot of new spheres appeared have appeared and this has resulted in various things, such as we come up with ^{in some fields} as decrease in numbers of vacancies or, on the other hand, changing in ~~was~~ a number of employers, available. There are many small business in IT sphere, that have to find new employees and.

Secondly, university students will have a particular goal. For example, they will know. They know that they need to develop their skills in ~~that~~ ^{the} sphere that they have chosen. For example, they may apply for different ~~student~~ university competitions or & work as an intern in some firms companies. This will help them in the ~~far~~ near future to find well-paid job or even start their own business in the field that is already well developed.

Also, it will help them to feel better about their future. They will be confident ^{and calm} with their profession and job. They will ~~not~~ have feeling of ~~terr~~ ^{awesome} calm and, wonderful and fascinating future.

In conclusion, I would like to say

It is significant to listen to such

Nowadays people are becoming more and more goal-oriented. A lot of us strive to achieve ^{something} ~~our goals~~. While some put much effort to pass ~~their~~ their exams with flying colors, others are determined to make their ~~idea~~ ideals ^{heard} ~~seen~~. There are so many worthy and make the world better. There are so many worthy goals and desires, ~~we~~ and no one ^{could} ~~can~~ ever deny it. However, even the greatest of greatest goals ^{doesn't} ~~can't~~ justify any means.

~~It is hard not to remember Rodion Raskolnikov from Fyodor Dostoevsky's novel "Crime and punishment".~~

~~I strongly believe that we mustn't forget about morality when working~~ I strongly believe that we mustn't forget about morality when we work hard to ~~acc~~ reach what we crave. Under any circumstances we mustn't break natural human ~~an~~ rights.

It is hard not to remember Rodion Raskolnikov from Fyodor Dostoevsky's novel "Crime and Punishment". Raskolnikov ^{was} ~~is~~ a poor student who developed his own ideas and ideas about how society works. He ~~believed~~ ^{great} ~~that believed~~ that there were important people who were like Napoleon who were allowed to do anything "for good". Also, ~~there were less~~ he thought that there were less important people and weak people who could be easily impacted and ruled. Rodion decided to kill an old and evil woman, as he supposed Rodion wanted to check his theory. He ~~dec~~ killed an old and evil woman, as he thought her death would make things better. However, he eventually ~~realis~~ all of this brought him unbearable suffering, and the young man eventually realised how terribly wrong he was. Thus, this example shows that violence is never a solution to ~~for~~ problems, ~~such as~~ for any problems, especially achieving goals.

I would like to conclude by saying that, any goal must be achieved without violence. We should remember that all people are equal, ~~and our~~ and we also should make sure to ~~goals must~~ use only morally acceptable methods.

I absolutely agree with the claim. Choosing a career is one of the most important decisions everyone has to make when he or she is young. But nowadays many young people have ~~to~~ some difficulties while choosing their future job. One of the possible reasons for that is the number of jobs we have in modern society, as it is really large, so younger people don't know how to "filter" them, how to choose only one of them all. In my opinion, the most useful advice for them is to base on the availability of the jobs they want to get. There're several facts that can prove its role.

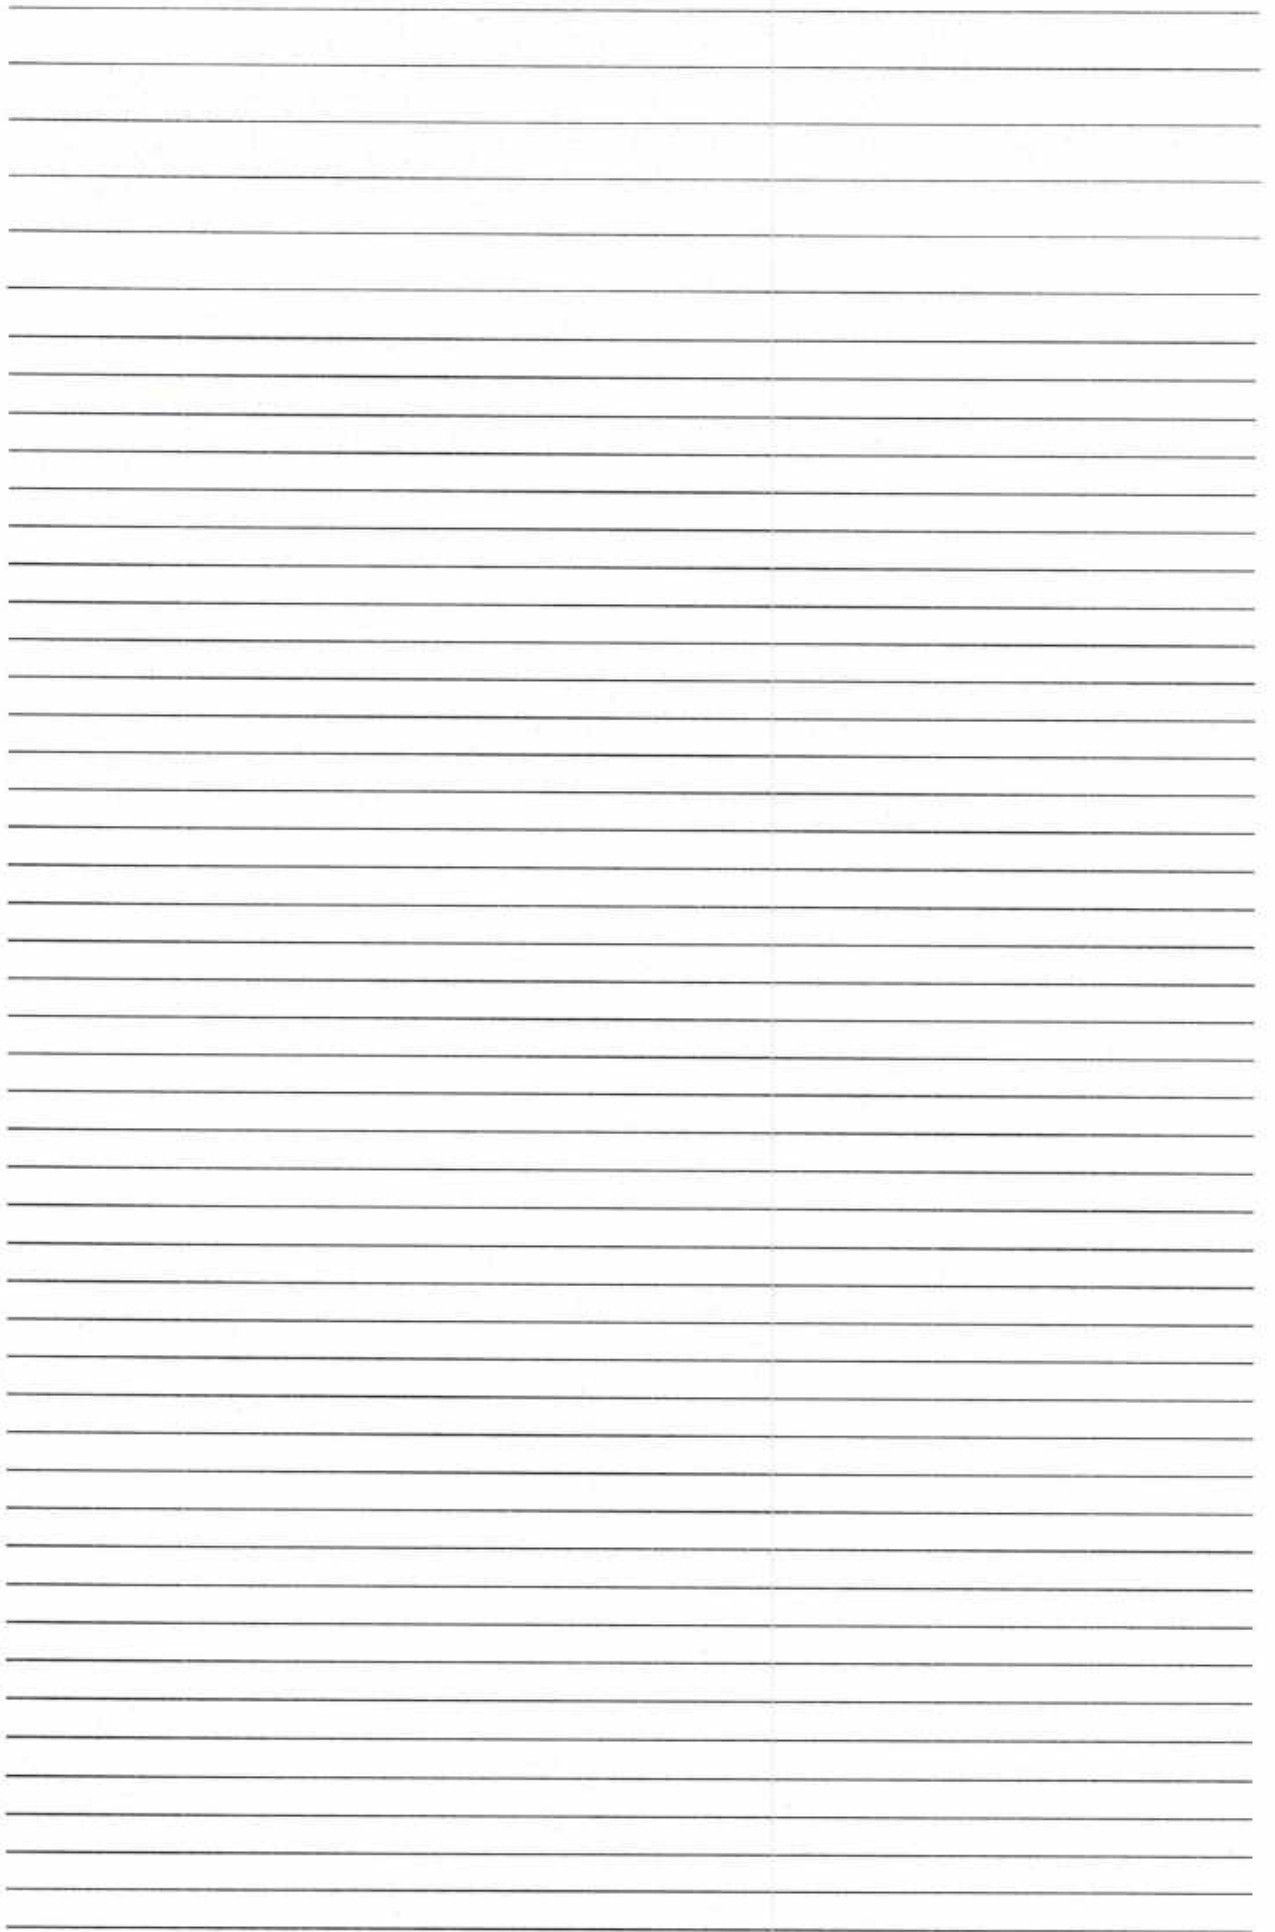

Firstly, let's remember that the aim of getting education is receiving a job after graduating. So, if a man has a university degree, but there are no vacancies available, his education is useless. But he had spent years to get it!.. To avoid such a situation, young men should think about the availability of their job in advance, while choosing a career.

Secondly, the information about the field allows a student to be more confident in his actions, decisions, in his plans. He becomes ready to overcome all the difficulties, he is ready for any type of challenges. These are very important things for those who want to become a real specialist in the field he is interested in.

To sum up, while making choice of career each person should draw attention to the factors which can influence on their decision. These are, of course, the sum of money the specialists get for the job, its opportunities, etc. But, anyway, all these don't matter if the job is unavailable. Young men should remember about this to avoid such mistakes as wasting time in their life. That's why I absolutely agree with the claim.

The history of our planet lasts for many milleniums. The humanity itself progressed and evolved: there were discovered and established facts about the nature, the universe; there were created useful devices without which nowadays our life seems unimaginable. Scientists and inventors may have spent all their lives, seeking the truth of the way the things work. But there is an opinion that answers appeared to found ~~out~~ unexpectedly while a person was making a research of a completely different topic. I can agree with that because there is a huge number of examples in the past that proves this point of view.

Isaac Newton is one of the most famous physic scientist in the world, every single person heard his name at least once. There is a well-known story that while he was sitting under a tree and making notes of his thoughts, an apple fell down on his head. Despite this event may have seemed unimportant, Isaac Newton realised the nature of the gravity, therefore he started his research and discovered the world gravity law which impacted the future developing of the science.

Another great example can be Archimed. Everybody remembers that right after he went into his bath suddenly an idea came to his mind. So after his investigation he opened the Archimed force which influenced on Physics as well.

In conclusion, I want to say that same things happen~~s~~ regularly in our lives too. Visiting a museum can reveal the things which you wasn't looking for. But I think it depends on encouragement and willingness to learn something new, to expand your knowledge. Doing something reluctantly, without enthusiasm will not lead to any discovery.

People usually discover or create something new by accident. When scientists or explorers try to find out ~~an~~^{the} answer to one question, they get the answer to another one. From my point of view, great discoveries are not made for purpose, they are accidental.

Firstly, the world is complex and unexpected. It is extremely difficult to make people's predictions come true. People are not able to control and plan everything that happens as they are not powerful enough. Although ~~science~~ a person can devote his life to looking for an answer to one issue, he can find an answer to absolutely different question. For example, there was a scientist who discovered "penicillin" by accident when he was not going to do it because he was learning something another. Despite the fact that this discovery was unexpected, it played a big role in the world.

Secondly, a lot of important vital discoveries were made lots of years ago when technologies were not really developed and people had few possibilities for making accurate predictions¹⁷⁰. Scientists and explorers had to use such tools that could provide ~~people~~¹⁸³ false information or people could misunderstand the knowledge they had gotten¹⁹². It led to the fact that discoveries were made not the way it should have been²⁰⁸.

For instance, there is a geographic discovery which is accidental. When an explorer wanted to be in one part of the world, he opened another one³⁴.

Nowadays most schoolchildren are aware of this story which makes it really essential and great²⁴⁹.

In conclusion, ~~discussing the topic of making discoveries~~ it is important to discuss the topic of making discoveries through history²⁵³. It can help to make sure why discoveries are accidental²⁷³.

The question "do goals justify means?" has been relevant for people since the beginning of the humanity. Different people in human history committed many horrible acts and until this day some justify their actions as necessary in order to achieve greater good. In my opinion, means are as important as the goal itself and truly noble goal should not lead to suffering of innocent people. In my response I would like to analyse this topic and provide arguments to defend my position.

First of all, some means of obtaining a goal can be dangerous or immoral. If the way a person achieves his goal is worse if the goal stays unachieved, a different approach should be used or the person should reject his aim as harmful for others, even if they think that their goal is worthy or noble.

Secondly, the worthiness of what one is trying to achieve is subjective and there can be people who won't benefit from the result, but get all disadvantages from unnecessarily cruel means. Additionally, consent is the most important factor here. People should willingly face the drawbacks and not be forced.

To conclude, not every goal that a person finds worthy should be enforced, as not every goal justifies means that are used to achieve it. People, while achieving their aims, should think about how it can ^{affects} others and should wisely choose methods they use.

The question "do goals justify means?" has been relevant for people since the beginning of time. ^{different} people in human history committed many horrible acts and until this day some justify ^{their actions} these as being necessary in order to achieve noble goals. In my opinion, the means are as important as the goal itself and truly noble goal should not lead to suffering of innocent people. (In my response I would like to analyze this topic and provide some arguments to defend my position.)

First of all, ~~it~~ means some means of attaining a goal ~~which~~ harm other people or just ~~that~~ can be ^{dangerous or immoral.} harmful for other people. If the way a person achieves his goal is worse than ^{if the goal stays} unachieved ~~goal~~, a different approach should be used or the person should reject his aim as harmful for others. ~~Also~~ Additionally, some may argue that ~~state~~ ~~that~~ ~~the~~ ~~suffering~~ ~~involve~~ there are goals that can change society for ~~it~~ in a good way.

secondly, the worthiness ~~of~~ ^{for} whom one is trying to achieve is subjective and there can ~~be~~ people who won't benefit from the ~~result~~ ^{result, but still will} the consequences, get all disadvantages from unnecessarily cruel means.

Of course, there are drawbacks of achieving almost ~~any~~ almost everything can have drawbacks, but if drawbacks can lead to situation even worse but not every goal that the person find worthy ~~drawbacks~~ worth should be enforced ~~not~~ only people willing ¹⁶

~~Are any means justifiable~~

It is an interesting ^{topic} ~~question~~: "If a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable". We still don't have one specific answer to this question.

Actually, I ~~don't agree~~ disagree with this claim. You always should think ^{do} ~~the~~ the means bring ^{less} ~~more~~ negative influence, than the goal itself bring positive impact.

For instance, we can think about Nazi Germany in the middle of XX century. Of course, Hitler proclaimed the ideology, he thought to be the best, he told people that they should teach the ^{nations} ~~people~~ who are not so wise and not in such great conditions as the Germans were. But we all know his actual goal. So, if I ask you, did this goal cost ~~the~~ ~~millions of lives~~ losses in millions of families or the attempt to kill the whole nation, your answer will probably be "No".

Even though Gitter's plans didn't come true, they brought terrible consequences, for which modern Germany still didn't fully pay.

In conclusion I want to say, that you should always ~~learn~~ learn all pros and cons of your goal and its means. If ~~means~~ ^{for} your goal negotively affects the other people or even you, you should think does it really worth
~~these~~ such consequences.

~~Is~~ If a goal is worthy then any means taken to attain it are justifiable? This question has always troubled philosophers throughout the history of the human kind. In my opinion, goals that could be considered "worthy" for any means to be taken to attain it just do not exist. Nothing can justify death or a war crime, ~~it can only lead to pain and~~ those goals can only lead to pain and suffering.

For example, Rodion Raskolnikov, the main character of the book "Crime and Punishment" by Dostoevsky, had a "theory". He thought there were only two types of people: the ones that have a right, and cowards. So, trying to test this theory out, Rodion has killed an old lady for the "greater good". Unfortunately, Raskolnikov has only found pain and suffering in his soul after doing such a terrible thing. This argument proves that even if you have good intentions, such as making this world a better place, will not justifying immoral means, such as killing, and it will only lead you to emptiness ~~in your~~ and destruction.

For another example, I would like to bring up the ^{use} act of cloning. Scientists have always been experimenting on this subject, ~~that eventually~~ actually lead to which ~~leading~~ to a successful cloning of a frog cell. ~~It is~~ In the future, we are probably going to be able to ^{not only} clone animals organs, but the human ones too. ~~This leads~~ But I find it very risky and a scare. In my opinion, this will lead to big scandals and deaths of innocent people, ^{while} trying to achieve the goal of making new organs for the people in need. ~~There is also a possibility~~

In conclusion, I would like to say that nothing can justify a terrible and immoral things that could be used to ~~get~~ achieve that "worthy goal".

I once heard, that many important discoveries or creations are accidental. Firstly I was shocked. How can something, usually so hard and genius be discovered accidentally?

Thinking about it, it appeared surprisingly easy to find out, that many inventions were made purely by accident and nothing more. For example, glass. We see it every day, but how did it appear in our life? Who invented it? Right! None. Humanity found first glass on beaches after the storms. They discovered, that places, shot by lightning, were molten into a see-through material - glass! Imagine, going out for a walk after storm to discover a thing that will be the main building material in the future.

For the second example we can look at modern medicine. Do you know, that the first antibiotic was made because of forgetfulness of its creator? Have you ever forgotten to place your food in the fridge? That's what happened. The scientist forgot to place one of his test subjects into a scientific fridge. But if the food would rotten in this conditions, to scientists surprise, he found, that the bacteria he was testing died. Incredibly, doesn't it? And purely accidental, just like the invention of glass.

In conclusion, as we can see, many important discoveries or creations were indeed accidental. And that was just a few examples of many. So, be vigilant, my friend, and maybe you, too, will invent something, with a keen eye and a little imagination or luck.

Some people think that if a goal is worthy, then any means taken to attain it are justifiable. It may be related to any sphere: politics, healthcare, economy or even personal achievements. A lot of people justify actions of great figures from the past: politicians, imperiors, doctors, scientists and others.

I strongly disagree with this opinion. Obviously, their intentions can be great but the way they achieve their goals matters. Firstly, ~~there is~~ no one can surely detect if a goal is worthy. Usually ~~is~~ it is personal and cannot be objective. Secondly, this statement means that everyone can do whatever they want without being punished. Can people's actions be justifiable in case they are illegal or may be harmful sometimes? Let's take a psychology as an example. Some time ago experiments on people and animals weren't permitted. The dozens of experiments that took place by scientists and psychologists were cruel and terrible, for example, the experiment on monkeys about the importance of mother's love. It is enough to take a look at the pictures that were taken during this experiment to understand how bad monkeys were treated. It goes without saying, that the results of those experiments are vital in psychology nowadays, however, I don't think that it can be justifiable. Moreover, the statement means that everyone has no limits in their actions, that is absolutely impossible. It will result in increasing the level of criminality and decreasing the level of safety.

To conclude, people should do their best to achieve goals. However, the actions that they attain shouldn't be harmful or illegal.

Achieving a goal that you wanted to achieve for a long time... What a marvelous feeling! You feel your body overcome with happiness and dopamine slowly running through your veins. You wish this moment never ended. That is why, in my honest opinion, any means taken to attain the goal are justifiable.

Someone might disagree with me, saying: "We lose ourselves trying to achieve goals that are out of our league. ~~It's~~ It's better to accept who we are now than become better". I totally disagree with this statement. ~~To prove my position~~ Arguably the greatest basketball player of all time, Kobe Bryant, once said: "There is no such thing as defeat in sports. Defeat means death. That's all, your life is shattered". These words prove that my position is right and I totally agree with Mr. Bryant. I think that without a point or a destination where we want to get in our lives, living is boring and pointless. Why do we even exist in this world if not to do something great?

Moreover, a goal one wants to reach should be as unreachable as possible. One should only dream about it at first, but with years of constant work and development it would be getting closer and closer.

To conclude, a goal is not a part of our lives. It is the purpose for living, the joy and happiness of it. And if one managed to achieve their goal, he/she should waste no time and make a new one, because it is the only thing that makes life brighter. Achieve your goals, broaden your horizons and never give up!

Nowadays school takes an important part in any persons life. Some like it, some hate it with all their passion. Some parents care about their childrens school life, some do not. But should parents care about school life and volunteer their time to schools?

To begin with, moms and dads, who devote time to hosting and organizing school activities, have better understanding of their children and ~~the~~ good relationships with them, since they do not only buy the food or make the decorations for the activities, but also control what their children will see, what will they eat and what will they do. This prevents traumatic incidents, conflicts and many other unpleasant things.

Secondly, parents volunteering their time to school can help the shy kids. For example, the shy kid will see that even his mom is taking part in school activities and will not be so scared to interact with other students during some school parties and events.

Last but not least, parent volunteers will help out the schools by a lot, because it will be really hard for teachers to host different events. Schools budget is not unlimited, all those students books, new laptops, equipment are hitting it really hard. So if parents volunteer as animators, cooks it will be much easier for schools to make students life unforgettable.

To sum it up, parent volunteers are a great invention for schools, which will help educational institutions to host interesting activities and increase the overall mood of students. If all kids ask their parents to help them organize a party, it will be less stressful for the teachers and more fun for the students.

It is claimed that all parents should be required to volunteer time to their children's schools. Personally, I disagree with the statement, in spite of benefits its implementation could possibly give to the schools.

My main argument is that under no circumstances should volunteering be forced to the parents, given that it is opposite of definition of what a voluntary job is. As a result, it can lead to some difficult issues. For instance, the parents who do not want to volunteer but are forced to do this may not only reject to help, but maybe even sabotage the job for others. Furthermore, there is no need in parents to maintain the school, as they usually pay an essential sum of money, ^{to do so} which could, which could be used to hire staff for the school.

On the other hand, in some cases, such as exams, graduation, etc., parents' voluntary support might be helpful, as a lot of people are required for such events. Ultimately, volunteering can be used by parents as an opportunity to take part in lives of their offspring, owing to the fact that ^{they} they usually work until late night and do not have much time to communicate.

To sum up, volunteering by parents has a positive influence both on them and the school, but it should not be implemented by force. Instead, some actions should be done by the school to promote voluntary help.

1. University students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field.

One cannot deny that it is vital for university students to make their choice of a field of study based on the availability of jobs in that particular field. However, others insist on making a decision of a field of study on the personal preferences, attitudes, and interests in life. Turning to my point of view, I ~~firmly~~ agree with them. I firmly believe that the key to make the best choice in one's life is to rely not only on personal values^{and passions}, but also on individual's traits of character.

To start with, one must admit that people are not the same. While one person can do physically demanding work, another cannot. Moreover, nowadays it has become tough for people to keep concentrated even for one hour. Hence, personally, I am inclined to believe that university students should base their choice of a field of study, ~~keeping in mind~~ on their personal characteristics.

Secondly, in my opinion, it is worth mentioning that a speciality of study in the university will probably have a great impact on the student's life and influence their future. That is why selection of ~~the~~ university and a field of study should be made ^{mindfully} based on one's keen interests and values in life.

On balance, to conclude everything I have mentioned university students definitely should make a research and know about the availability of jobs in the field of study they want to pursue. ~~Further~~ ^{Furthermore} However, I am convinced that a choice of a speciality in the university is intricate and personal decision; ^{thus} hence, students should ~~as~~ base their choice of a field of study on their personal ^{character traits and} ~~character~~ passions, ~~and~~ ^{also} in ~~prospective~~ ^{life} ~~benefits~~ ^{values} and preferences.
